Miss Frances Carroll, of Rochester, visited her father Mr. Wm. Carroll last week.

Miss Catherine MacNamara, of Rochester, was the guest of her mother Mrs. Ellen MacNamara at her home on Prospect St. last week.

A class composed of forty members received their first holy communion at 8:30 o'clock mass Sunday. The class presented a very beautiful appearance as they marched from the school to the church, here they occupied seats in the middle aisle. Father Farron delivered an inspiring sermon to the young communicants reminding them of the sanctity of the occasion and that it was a day never to be forgotten by them.

Mr. and Mrs. Archibald have moved into their new home on Center St.

Sunday occurred the death of Peter McHugh at his home on River St., at the age of 19 years. Diphtheria followed by an attack of the grip, which resulted in consumption was the cause of his demise. He is a graduate of the Avon High School and from there he entered St. Vincent's school in Montreal, Canada preparatory for a Christian Brother having taken his first vows early this year and received the name Noah O'Marie. He attended school up to five weeks ago and then owing to his poor health returned home waiting for the summons to go to his heavenly home. He was a model young man and loved by all who knew him and his death in the prime of young manhood is a severe blow to his sister, Miss Mary and his brothers, Hugh, John, James and Charles who survive him. Interment was in St. Agnes Cemetery, beside his father and mother who had gone before him.

RAILROAD NOTES

General Passenger Agent Daniels, of the New York Central, is the happy possessor of a letter from a prominent Minneapolis man which thanks the railroad warmly for the excellent care which was given to his wife and children in their departure and arrival from Europe recently. The railroad make a special effort to look after women who are traveling alone.

The New York Central and Lake Shore Railroads have decided to place in service, June 15, a new 20-hour train to run between New York and Chicago every day in the year. It will be called the twentieth Century train, and it will be beyond all question the fastest long-distance train in the world, making the 980 miles between New York and Chicago in exactly 20 hours, including all stops.

COOK OPERA HOUSE

The Cook Opera House Stock Company has apparently established itself firmly in the regard of the Rochester theater-going contingent. Its uniform strength and the attractive personalities of the principals were strongly in evidence in both "The Little Minister" and the "Masqueraders," both plays calling for much talent to make them effective.

The play announced for next week is one that will bring out the full strength of the organization. "Under the Red Robe" will be presented. This is the play made from Stanley J. Weyman's famous story of the same name. "Under the Red Robe" is superior to the average run of "dramatizations" made from popular books, for the reason that the dramatist had little or nothing to do in transferring the action from printed pages to the stage. The story "acts itself." The well-knit plot covers a limited field of action. The characters explain themselves by their "lines." In fact, the technical exigencies of the situation were all the dramatist had to bother his head about.

"Under the Red Robe" will be presented at the Cook Opera House every night next week, with matinees Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday.

BAKER THEATRE

Beginning Monday, June 9th, Owen Davis' Stock Company at the Baker Theatre will be seen in a very complete production of "Blue Jeans" Joseph Arthur's Dramatic Romance of rural life in Indiana. Although the story of the play is dramatic in the extreme it relies for a large part of its success upon several sensational novelties. The principal features are the very realistic saw-mill scene, during which the hero, "Perry Bascom" is saved from a dreadful death by the quick wit and heroic action of June, his sweetheart, the Barbecue, during which a large band and a double quartette are introduced, a very comical supper scene and many special and instructive features.

RETURN THANKS

The Sisters in charge of the Home for the Aged, desire to return thanks to the young ladies and gentlemen who contributed their talent at the concert recently given for the benefit of this institution and to Rev. A. Notebaert for use of French hall. Also to the individual members of the L. C. B. A. for disposing of tickets, to J. P. Smith Printing house for printing of tickets and programs. Howe and Rogers & Co. use of rugs, Mrs. C. H. Wilkins, J. B. Keller Sons, E. R. Fry and H. E. Wilson for palms and out flowers, Union and Advertiser, Post Express, Democrat and Chronicle, Morning Herald, Rochester Times and Catholic Journal for press notices, Messrs. Hughes, Gendreau, O'Brien and Connell for assistance at hall, and to all others who helped in any way to make the concert such a grand success artistically, socially and financially.

BASE BALL

Table with columns: Standing of the Clubs to Friday A. M., Won, Lost, Per Cent. Teams include Immaculates, St. Bridgets, Corpus Christi, Holy Apostles, St. Mary's, St. Boniface.

Tuesday, Holy Apostles vs. St. Bridgets. Thursday, St. Boniface vs. St. Mary. Saturday, Corpus Christi vs. Immaculate Conception.

Mr. Oscar Young, Mr. Raymond Mullins, Miss Sadie Murray and Miss Florence Keller have registered at Commercial Training School, 340 Powers Block.

THE VANISHED HAND

By Harold W. Raymond

Copyright, 1902, by the S. S. McClure Company

"If ever I find money, I'll keep it. No advertising for the owner with me—I guess not."

Many a time has Percival Langdon said this, with a careless glance at the sidewalk and an odd feeling of wonder how it would feel were he to see a fat roll of bills at his feet. And now, there in his pathway, lay a pretty little purse, fat and feminine, as unmistakably the lost property of a woman as if it had borne the name of the owner in big letters on the side.

Percival picked it up. It was of snakeskin, somewhat worn, but still dainty, and it had silver trimmings and a silver clasp. As the finder held it for a moment in his hand some psychic force from the fingers accustomed to carrying it seemed to strike into his brain. It almost seemed to him as if he felt the warm weight of a little hand in his own. Who has not found this personality in a castoff glove or shoe or other object strongly associated with its wearer? Even a castoff relic of the dead has the touch, the "feel," of the absent one long years after he or she has departed.

The young man looked up and down the street. Unconsciously his eyes sought out a short, stout figure, one befitting ownership of the little treasure-trove which he had picked up. But there was no one in sight whom he could associate even remotely with the purse.

He laughed aloud. "Well, by Jove, this is funny," he said to himself. "For years I have been wishing that I could find money and have planned how I would get rid of it if fortune ever favored me, and the moment I really do find some, behold, I am looking for the owner. But perhaps there is no money in this little baggage to tempt me after all."

He opened it. There were a number of samples of dress goods, a recipe for making soft gingerbread ("Soft gingerbread, that's good," exclaimed Percival, smacking his lips. "If there is one thing I like better than another it's soft gingerbread and the soft gingerbread style of girl!"), a newspaper clipping containing three verses of sentimental poetry, a glove buttoner and $30 in bills and a handful of small change.

"My, what a tidy little sum!" cried Percival. "There's a box of cigars, a pair of new shoes, a round of theaters. All I've got to do is to toss the purse into a sewer and put the money in my pocket!"

It was only a passing thought, a flash, the echo of ideas he had often had before when that dream which comes to all of us at one time or another—the dream of "picking up money"—lingered in his fancy.

But was there nothing in the purse to mark its owner? It did not appear so. "Women are so silly," he said. "No; it is I who am silly," he added as it suddenly came to him that there was a back pocket in the purse. He lifted the cover. Yes; there was a narrow card tucked away in it. With blundering fingers he fished it out and turned it up so he could see the name inscribed upon it—"her name." Somehow possession of the pocketbook had given him a sort of proprietary interest in the owner.

It was a pretty name, very pretty. Percy caught his breath when he read it:

MABEL SWEETBRIAR, No. 77 Larkin Street.

"Mabel! I always fancied that name." For some reason he could not understand Percy raised the bit of pasteboard to his lips, remembering that her fingers had touched it. "Mabel! Short and plump, with dark hair and big brown eyes. Do I bet it? Yes! Thirty dollars against thirty! Well, bless my soul, Percival Langdon, I guess you woke up daffy this morning. You're crazy as a June bug!"

A moment later Percival was walking rapidly toward Larkin street. It was a mile away and in a good quarter of the town. But little thought he of distance. His one desire was to find the owner of the purse and restore her property before she had a chance to suffer much over its loss. Had she been a personal friend he could not have felt more anxious about it. As he went along he kept repeating to himself, "Oh, for the touch of a vanished hand!"

The touch of a vanished hand! Did he not feel it on the polished leather? Langdon's heart was pumping like a fire engine when he rang the doorbell of a pretty little two-story house which bore the magic number "77" in gold foil on the glass panels. He was a good looking young bank clerk, underpaid, as all bank clerks are, but earning a decent living and able to dress well and, as he would say it, live like a gentleman. He had an inborn honesty for which he did not give himself credit, for he often thought, given the opportunity, that he would flich a fortune without a tremor. And yet the moment he was put to the test he did not have an instant's temptation.

"Short and dark. I beg a thousand pardons," stammered Percival. "You—I was saying is this Miss Mabel Sweetbriar?"

She clasped her hands. "Oh, you have found it! I knew you would! I told mother you—that is, the finder—would read my name upon the card and bring it home, Mamma!" She raised her voice, and Percival noticed that it was sweet and fine. "The lost is found, dear! You will not have to put off the consultation after all! But you must come in, sir! Mother and I will want to thank you."

"Yes, Mabel," said a gentle voice from a room beyond. "Bring the gentleman in. He has taken such a load off our minds! You will excuse my not rising, sir? I am an invalid."

When Percival Langdon left the house an hour later, with an invitation to call again ringing in his ears, he waited until he got round the corner, and then he kicked himself. "Down on your knees," he said to himself, "and thank God that you are not a villain! If you had taken the earnings of that poor girl, already laid upon the altar of her mother's sickness, you would have been the most unmitigated scoundrel alive. It makes me shudder to think of it. But you were not tempted. You were not! The touch of a vanished hand" was on that purse, like a talisman. And what a plump little hand it was! Just what I conceived it would be. How warm it was and magnetic! She pressed mine and told me she was sure we would be great friends. Percival Langdon, I believe you are the seventh son of a seventh son. The glimpse you got of the owner of that purse was borne out by the reality in every respect."

Six months later the plump little hand and the plump little owner thereof became the property of Mr. Percival Langdon for better or worse and all the rest of it. He is assistant paying teller at the bank now and has a salary not to be despised. And he will tell you, with a voice of pride and a smacking of the lips, that his wife makes the best soft gingerbread in all the world and other things just as good. He would not trade tables with that supplied by the finest chef that ever came out of Alsace or Lorraine.

Little Joys of Feudal Times

Some of the antique forms of paying homage to a feudal superior were very comic. In one of the lordships of France the peasants were obliged to bring a canary bird to the chateau placed on the top of a carriage drawn by four horses. In Austria a noble vassal was to present every St. Martin's day to his superior two pots of flies. Another nobleman in France offered to his lord as a mark of homage a grasshopper.

When the abbot of Figeac made his entrance into the city of his abbey, the lord of Monthrun and Larogue received him dressed as a harlequin, with one leg bare. When the abbot descended from his horse, the same person held his stirrup and when he sat down to table waited behind his chair to fill his cup with wine.

The lord of Pace had a right to summon all the pretty women of Saumur and its suburbs every Trinity day before him, and they were to pay him each 4 farthings and a chaplet of roses. Those who refused to dance with his officers were to have the family arms marked on their bodies with the point of a needle.

Equal to the Occasion

The author of "Across England in a Dogcart" once stopped to examine a church in the little village of Enstone. The day was warm, and on leaving the church I rested for a while in the grateful shade of the building and for the sake of the coolness still kept my hat in my hand. While standing there I overheard one workman ask of another: "Why do 'e keep 'is 'at off like that out of doors, mate?" "Cause 'e's a Quaker, o' course," replied the mate. "Quakers always do in churchyards."

There was an opportunity not to be lost. "No," said I; "I am not a Quaker; I am an Episcopalian." There was a short, awkward pause. Then the first workman, evidently of an inquiring turn of mind, said to his fellow mason, who seemed to be considered an authority: "A B-piscopale one, 'e says 'e is. Wet's that, Bill?" "Oh," replied the learned Bill, quite equal to the occasion, "that's one of them fancy foreign religions, sure!"

The Rolling Passion

Stonewall Jackson's dying words were, "Pass the infantry rapidly to the front." "Tell A. P. Hill to prepare for action!" "We will pass over the river and rest under the shade of the trees on the opposite side." He was delicious, and, like Napoleon's, his mind, as it feebly fulfilled its last office, was with his military past.

FATHER KOENIG'S NERVE TONIC

All Over the World

Pioneer, Tenn., Oct. 8, 1888. "I cannot thank you enough for the complete cure Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic has brought about in my case of epilepsy. I recommend this remedy to all sufferers of this disease, and may God bless its work all over the world."

Rev. J. T. Davis, N. M., writes: "Father Koenig's Nerve Tonic deserves its reputation. Cured entirely with only one bottle a girl 8 years old of St. Vitus' Dance. Another girl 15 years of age, who had frequent and awful fits of epilepsy, was relieved by the first bottle. A man who used the remedy was relieved at once from nervousness caused by overwork. It has been beneficial in all cases of nervous diseases that came to my notice."
