OUR FOURTEENTH YEAR.

With this issue THE CATHOLIC JOURNAL begins the fourteenth year of its existence, and, while we have endeavored at all times to furnish to the people of the diocese an ideal Catholic newspaper still we have many improvements in view for the future. Some subscribers who are in arrears can help us very materially toward this direction by paying up back dues, while others, who always pay in advance, can assist us by showing the paper to their friends and getting them to subscribe.

Pope Leo XIII says: "A Catholic newspaper in a parish is a perpetual mission. Let all who truly and from their souls desire that religion and society, defended by human intellect and literature, should flourish, strive by their liberality to guard and protect these productions of the Catholic press, and let every one in proportion to his income, support them with his money and influence, for to those who devote themselves to the Catholic press we ought by all means to bring help of this kind, without which their industry will either have no results or uncertain and miserable ones."

Another way to assist the Catholic paper is when in want of printing of any description to place your order with the JOURNAL, and receive the best work at the lowest rates. In conclusion we desire to return grateful thanks to all our friends and subscribers and hope to further merit their hearty and generous support.

Five Minute Sermon.

Healing of the Son of the Ruler of Capharnaum.

Jesus worked this miracle in the city of Cana in Galilee, where He had converted water into wine. The ruler was from Capharnaum, which is situated at the northwestern side of the Lake of Genesareth, many miles distant from Cana. Capharnaum was a city loved by the Divine Teacher and one which He had made famous by many miracles.

When Christ rebuked the man, saying: "Unless you see signs and wonders you believe not" He did this to show the ruler the imperfection of his faith, for if he really believed that Christ was true God he would have known that a simple act of His all-powerful will was sufficient to cure his dying son, and that it was not necessary for the sick son to be present in person. This reproof was given, however, not only to him, but also to all who thought like him, and whose faith was as imperfect as his was.

When the ruler heard from his servants, who had come in haste to meet their master, that the fever had suddenly left his dying son the day before at the seventh hour,—that is, one hour after midday,—and, therefore, at the very same moment when Christ had assured him that his son would live, then he was convinced that Christ was truly the Son of God; that He was almighty, and the Lord of life and death; he believed Him to be the expected Messiah, and he and his whole family sincerely embraced the faith of the Gospel.

The lesson we should derive is first, to learn how useful trials and afflictions are to lead us to God, for the ruler and his whole house would perhaps not have believed in Jesus Christ if the son had not been afflicted with that mortal sickness. Secondly, we are to admire the goodness of God in bearing with our imperfections when we pray to Him; and lastly, like that ruler, we are to lead our neighbor, at least by our good example, to the knowledge of God and to the faithful observance of His holy law.

OUR IMMIGRANTS.

The Steady Catholic Invasion of the United States.
An official statement of the immigration bureau recently issued from Washington for the year 1901-2 yields on analysis some surprising results. The fact stands out clear and strong that the immigration of Catholics from Europe into this country completely overshadows that of all others—causes them to dwindle in fact into insignificance.

Out of a total of 730,798 Italy leads with 178,375. Austria-Hungary is a close second with 171,989. The Russian empire and Finland come third with 107,347 (vast numbers of whom are Poles). Ireland sent 29,138 from her already scant numbers, while the whole German empire contributed but 28,804. To Norway were accredited 17,484 and to Sweden 30,894. Only 3,117 Frenchmen changed their flag for the stars and stripes, while 13,576 from England crossed the sea.

It will thus be seen that of the two first nations we have the surprising number of 350,364, or nearly half of the total of 730,798. If to these countries we add Belgium 2,577, Portugal 5,307, Roumania's 7,198, say a third of the total of the Russian empire, which total is 107,347; Spain 975, a part of Switzerland 2,344, three-fourths of Ireland's 29,138, we arrive at the surprising conclusion that three out of every four, if not five out of six, of all the immigrants who arrived here in the past twelve months are adherents of the Catholic faith; and when they arrive how they increase and multiply according to the Scriptural injunction:

"This tide of invasion will presumably gather force and volume as the years roll on and here in the United States the Catholic church will be strong and prudent in her divine effort to 'teach all nations.' Her benign influence here increases with every ship that comes to port. All nations will flow to her and honor her as their mother.—Church Calendar of West Virginia.

The Death of Archbishop Croke.

By the death of Archbishop Croke the church in Ireland has lost its best beloved prelate. Born of a Catholic father and Protestant mother, he was educated at the Irish college, Paris, and obtained the degree of doctor of divinity in Rome. After his ordination as priest he held the posts of professor of rhetoric at the Diocesan college, Carlow, and professor of theology at the Irish college, Paris. Then he returned to his native diocese of Cloyne, spent some time on the mission and was appointed president of St. Coleman's college, Fermoy. This position he held for seven years, after which he resumed missionary work as parish priest of Donerally. In 1870, at the age of forty-five, he was nominated bishop of Auckland, New Zealand. Five years later, when the archbishopric of Cashel became vacant, three names were chosen by the parish priests, but they were set aside by the holy see, and Dr. Croke was recalled to take charge of the archdiocese. Since then Dr. Croke's guiding hand has had a large share in molding and supporting Irish national movements, and he was pre-eminent among those to whom the Nationalist organization before Mr. Parnell's fall owed its strength and vigor. His memory will long be cherished by Irishmen in all parts of the world.—London Catholic Times.

Knowledge of God.

The infant in the cradle tends its little hand toward support which it needs, which is sure to be there, that of a mother's stronger hand; so the adult, without reflection, as a naturally as he parts his lips to inhale the life giving air, opens his soul to a mysterious power, superior to himself, superior to all things within immediate reach, and invokes it in reverence and in supplication. What impels him to this reaching out of heart and mind is the "God consciousness" which is implanted in the very depths of his being, this "God consciousness" being verily a part of his being, put into it by whatever the power that fashioned it, and together with this sunk into it other feelings of want for and aspiration toward realities, the contact with which fills our human life and completes human destiny. The untutored savage speaks to this mysterious power, whose face he sees beaming in the shining sun, whose voice he hears in the passing storm, and to be thus religious he waited not for lesson of theologian or of philosopher.

The Need of a Catholic Press.

The German Catholic societies always do one thing well and set an example worthy of imitation to other societies. They emphasize the need of a Catholic press. The New York German societies at their convention during the first week of June, 1902, resolved:

"We urgently request Catholics to shun all literature and products of the press which under the mask of neutrality seeks to undermine their faith, and we urgently implore upon the mind of every Catholic to support the Catholic press, which has come to be an absolute necessity.—Catholic Home
