A YOUNG DIPLOMATIST.

The proudest sometimes unbend, and the Botanical Gardens were, for one afternoon, thrown off their usual reserve. Ordinary folks had only to come across Regent's Park from Chester Gate, and present a card at the entrance to the gardens, and the bowlerhatted old gentleman at the gate welcomed them as though they were most important members. Miss Llewellyn and Master Kenneth Walker, her friend, walked on the grass in the direction of the music.

"Anybody you know here, Miss Llewellvn?"

"I don't suppose so, Kenneth." "You don't know many people, do you, Miss Llewellyn?" "Very few."

"Wonder at that." said the small boy, "because you're not bad looking, you know. Did you use to come here when you were well off? Do they sell lemonade here?"

"Seems possible. You think that everybody ought to have plenty of friends?

"Plenty of friends," said Kenneth. wisely, "but one in particular. Wonder how old you are?"

"That," said the young woman, goodtemperedly, "that is the only question, Kenneth, that you must never put to a lady.'

"I should guess," he said, critically, as they sat down in the low chairs near the refreshment tent and watched the people, "that you were about twentysix." Miss Llewellyn gave a quaint secture of horror. "Well, twenty-five. then. Fancy!" The small boy whistled amazedly. "Twenty-five, and not married yet."

"Young man," said Miss Llewellyn, flushing and affecting a tone of great severity, "I find your conversation much too personal. You would like lemonade, I think and two places of cake."

The scarlet-coated band perched on ceats near the glass house, with a crowd of smartly dressed folks is front of them, started a cheerful selection from a comic opera. Miss Llewllyn, a composed young woman in an ordinary way, as young women are who

There was a pause that comes after the formalities of greeting. Master Waller, not having spoken for quite half a minute, felt that he was in some , danger of being overlooked, and coughed.

"This is my little friend, Kenneth Waller," she said. "Kenneth, this is Mr. Bradley.'

"What's the matter with your face?" esked the small boy. "Have you been ebroad?"

Mr. Bradley placed a broad fist on the round table, and leaned down toward Master Waller good-naturedly. He seemed as confused at the meeting as Miss Llewellyn, and as unprepared for conversation.

"I have been abroad, young gnan I've been hunting orchrids."

"Are you home for good now?" asked Kenneth.

Mr. Bradley. "I am off again to South America in a day or two."

"Why don't you stay in London?" "Nobody asks me to stay.'

"Should have thought." said Master Waller, "that you could have got somebody to do that. Have you got any foreign postage stamps about you?"

Friendship between the two gentlemen was cemented and made permanent by the production of several foreign stamps and an envelope to place them in.
