IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Julia Buckley, who died June 26th, loved by all who knew her for noble character and christian qualities.

When the evening shadows deepen
And the sun sinks in the west,
When the turmoil of labor is ended,
Our hearts seek a haven of rest.
Round our hearthstone at twilight we gather,
But mother we loved is not there,
Her dear voice is chanting the praise
Of God in his home so fair.

Now the world seems dark and dreary,
The flowers have lost their bright bloom,
Our once happy home is darkened,
And shrouded in sorrow and gloom,
Since the summons came for mother,
That called her far away,
To a brighter home beyond the skies
At the closing of the day.

Oh, now where is the beauty
Of the twinkling stars at night,
Do the birds sing just as sweetly
Or the sunshine seem so bright?
Since our angel mother left us
At the close of the twilight dim
When each happy bird was trilling
To God its vesper hymn.

We will take her to our home,
Gods holy angels said,
And her spirit then departed,
As we knelt around her bed,
When June time seemed the fairest
And the roses were in bloom,
We laid the one we loved the best,
To rest beneath the tomb.

Now our hearts are sad and lonely,
We have no mother now to love,
Since God sent his heavenly angels,
With the message from above,
With shining wings and harps of gold,
They entered in our door
And took the one we loved the best
To return to us no more.

Now she dwells with them in heaven
And in her home above,
Before our Saviour's throne will pray
For those on earth she loved.
And we know she will be waiting,
To receive her children there,
When God will summon us to meet her
In his home above so fair.

THE CROP OF GOLD.

Could Not Raise It Like Corn, Potatoes and Such Things.

One day at school little Julian had been learning about gold. The teacher had told the scholars how valuable it was, had shown them a gold ring, a gold dollar and also some pieces of stone with spots of bright yellow gold showing in them. She told them that gold was dug up out of the earth, and a good deal more about this precious metal that Julian, being a very little boy, did not exactly understand.

When Julian got home he said to his Aunt Minnie, "I wish I could raise a crop of gold."

His aunt explained that one could not raise gold like corn, potatoes and such things. "But although you cannot raise a crop of real gold," she said, "you can raise one of something very bright and pretty, that can be truly called a crop of gold."

"Will you show me how?" asked the little boy.

"Some day," said Aunt Minnie.

Aunt Minnie never forgot her promises; so one day she called Julian, and, giving him a brown paper bag which felt quite heavy, said. "Now we must plant for our crop of gold."

They went out on the lawn; and Aunt Minnie, with a sharp trowel, made some holes an inch and a half across, and three inches deep.

Julian opened the bag, and found a number of small brown things in it, rather flat on top, and each bulb, as Aunt Minnie called them, had two white, hard points on it, sprouts, his aunt said.

Julian put a bulb in each hole, with the sprouts up, then with a small iron spoon he carefully filled up the holes with nice black earth from the garden, which Aunt Minnie had brought a box of all ready for him. The holes did not show much in the lawn, but Julian and his Aunt Minnie pulled the grass over them so they could hardly be seen at all; for they wished to give the rest of the family, by and by, what little Julian called "a big surprisement."

"What next?" asked Julian.

"Nothing more can be done now," said his aunt, "you must wait."

"How long?"

"Until spring."

This seemed a very long time to the little boy, as it was then only the last of October. But before he knew it, the winter had raced away.

It was the fifteenth of March, a fine, warm sunshiny day. Julian was looking out of the window and he saw something yellow, just as yellow as gold, on the lawn, and running out he found that his crop of gold had begun to come up.

In a few days there were twenty-five bunches of shining yellow crocuses in full bloom.

"Isn't that a nice crop of gold?" asked Aunt Minnie.

"Yes, splendid," said little Julian.

The bees thought so, too, for, early as it was, they came eagerly to visit this crop of gold.

Julian was delighted with the charming gold-colored flowers, and the family were greatly pleased too, and seemed to enjoy the "suprisement," just as much as Julian had hoped that they would do.

If the lawn is not mowed too early, the crocuses will come up year after year without having to be planted again; any way, Julian is quite resolved to raise this crop of gold every year.

So Hot!

"Oh, it is so hot!" said Betty. "It is so hot! Mammy, I don't know what I shall do, it is so hot!"

Now, Betty was not doing anything. She was sitting by the window, with her head on the sill, and the shade of the big horsechestnut tree made a little coolness; so mammy went on with her mending and said nothing, except that it was hot, and she was sorry for Betty.

Presently Betty saw a hand-organ man with a monkey coming. She raised her head, and he stopped under the window and began to play.

"O mammy," cried Betty, "the monkey is dancing! May I go out and dance, too? Oh, he is such a dear little monkey! Now he is climbing up the fence, and walking along the top. O, mammy, may I climb up and walk along the fence? Please, mammy, say I may!" And Betty jumped up and down, and danced little steps like the monkey's, and tried to look like him, but fortunately did not succeed.

"I thought it was so hot!" said mammy. "Do you think dancing will make you cooler, Betty?"

"I don't think it so hot now," said Betty. "Not quite so hot, mammy. You see, I didn't know what to do then. It's always hotter when you don't know what to do, but now I do know!"

A Sparrow in the Rain.

Recently during a severe rain storm a family heard the cry of a young sparrow. A search was made, and the sparrow was found in a puddle of water, too chilled, apparently, to move. He was brought into the house and put in a box near the kitchen stove. After a time he chirped cheerfully, then hopped about the box, and finally flew about the room. He seemed able to care for himself, and the window was opened, when, with a gay little chirp the sparrow flew out in the rain. Not long after that the cry of a sparrow was heard again, which seemed to ask for help. A search discovered a sparrow in the same puddle of water, wet and miserable. Again the little stray was put in the box by the kitchen range, and in a little time he, too, was flying about the room, very happy and contented. When the window was raised he seemed in no hurry to fly away, but after a time he did leave us. Four times a sparrow was rescued from that puddle of water, each time showing a greater reluctance to fly out in the rain. Afterward we decided that it was the same sparrow, that he did not like the rain, and learned how to get indoors where it was dry. Do you think it was the same sparrow?

President Lincoln's Sentiment.

It is said that Lincoln thus replied to a letter asking for a "sentiment" and his autograph: "Dear Madam: When you ask from a stranger that which is of interest only to yourself always inclose a stamp. Thanks for your sentiment and here's your autograph. A. Lincoln, Wash'n's Cheapside, Etc."

USEFUL SUGGESTIONS.

For burns and scalds apply vaseline. It will give speedy relief and is a sure cure. Do not allow the burns to become dry, but keep them well covered with vaseline.

Camphor moth balls will keep silver and silver-plated ware from tarnishing. I was standing at a glass case in a large store watching the clerk putting these balls in among the silver. I asked why she was doing this and was told it was to keep the silver from tarnishing.

For bleeding from the nose bathe the face and neck with cold water. A physician's wife told me that bleeding from the nose could be stopped by chewing. Put gum or any substance in the mouth and keep constantly chewing it and the bleeding will stop in a short time.

Powdered rosin is good to stop a cut from bleeding. After the rosin is sprinkled on the cut wrap the part with soft cotton or linen. As long as the wound feels feverish keep the cloth wet with cold water.

If sleeplessness is caused by too much blood in the head it may be helped by putting a cloth, wet in cold water, to the back of the neck.

Salt and water not too strong, will relieve a tickling in the throat. Use water about milkwarm and gargle frequently.

Sickness of the stomach is often relieved by drinking a teacupful of hot water. Drink just as hot as you can. Purgatives and strong physics are hurtful. A dose of castor oil is perfectly harmless and is sure to relieve the stomach. It is good for bilious colic and if taken in time may prevent serious illness.
