PUZZLES.

Key to last week's puzzles:

No. 1—One head is found, with picture inverted, in front of girl, who holds parasol; this head is in black. The other head is in white at right when picture is held with girl at top. Fish is joined to top of larger head, picture held in proper position.

No. 2—Canoes is behind trees at upper left hand of picture, the latter being held in proper position; right end of canoe formed by trunk of tree on right side. Paddle runs across top of picture, blade making clear white space in center.

No. 3—Invert picture. First face is in rustic fence, with nose pointing at lower button on man's coat. Dog's head is to right in other division of fence. Now give picture one turn to right and see the other face in center of what will then be lower panel of fence.

No. 4—With picture held in proper position white fish will be seen at lower edge in center headed down rapids. Second fish just to right has white head and striped body. Basket will be found between tree at upper right hand corner and edge of picture, if one turn to right is made.

GRANT'S CUTTEGE.

Worms, Weather and Vandalic Slows Working Destruction.

Deer is slowly consuming the life log cabin from which, when it stood on the bluff at City Point overlooking the James river, General Grant directed the movements of the Union army in the last few months of the civil war, and which now stands in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia.

Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer, a sister of General Grant, says the city is not taking proper care of it and is letting it go to ruin. The Park Commission says the cabin is being preserved as well as possible. Both might modify their statements slightly. Delay is certainly getting in some serious work—decay and that large part of the Philadelphia public who like to cut names and dates and to take a piece home.

Gen. Grant's Headquarters.

Even if the vandals were stopped there is apparently no way to stop the worms. Creosote or tar would preserve the wood, but it would change the color, and the Park Commission says that if the cabin were painted it would lose interest as a relic. Another house built over and around it would cost more than the commission cares to pay, and the cabin, covered thus, would go to dry rot anyway. Besides, the shingles on the cabin are perfectly good as they are.

At City Point.

The headquarters of the Union armies were at City Point, on the James river, from June, 1864, to March, 1865. Grant and his staff slept in tents until late in the fall, when, seeing that they were to stay all winter, they had cabins built, a dozen or so, facing three sides of a square, with the open end looking out over the bluff and the river. Grant's was the only two room cabin in the camp, his wife sometimes occupying the second room when she went down to visit him.

It was in this cabin that he transacted all his army business in the last four or five months of the war, communicated with Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas, wrote to Sherman for his march through the Carolinas, called Sheridan back to the Army of the Potomac, wrote the order to Schofield that transferred him across the continent, and the much discussed dispatches to Thomas, Lincoln, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Meade and Admiral Porter were gathered under the little roof at one time, and it was in this cabin that Grant received the Commissioners of the Confederacy who came out from Richmond in March, 1865, and here that he wrote the orders for the final military operations of the war.

George H. Stuart, a prominent Philadelphia, president of the Sanitary Commission, was at City Point when General Grant left there, and the General presented him with the cabin. It was brought to this city in 1869 or 1870 and erected in Fairmount Park. The Stuart family wanted to remove it a few years ago, but didn't press the wish, and after Mr. Stuart's death his heirs presented it to the city.

What He Found.

A group of merry commercials were seated in the smoking room, when suddenly Bodkins volunteered a story of a remarkable find he once had.

"When I was a young man," commenced the irrepressible B, "I was employed in a large house in the City, and as is usual with persons of that age, I fell in love with a young lady, and in due course of time was engaged. About two months before our marriage was to take place, I was suddenly sent to Australia on very important business, occasioned by the death of one of the firm in that country. I took a hasty and affectionate leave of my intended, with the promise to write to each other often. I was detained somewhat longer than I expected, but just before I sailed for home I bought a handsome and valuable diamond ring, intending it as a 'coming home' present for my sweetheart. As I was nearing shore and reading the paper which the pilot had brought on board, curiously enough my eye fell on the 'marriages,' and there I saw an announcement of her marriage with another, a fellow I knew very well, too, which so enraged me that in my passion I threw the ring overboard.

"A few days afterwards I was dining at this very hotel; fish was served up and in eating it I bit on something hard, and what do you suppose it was?" "The diamond ring!" exclaimed several.

"No," said the merry Bodkins, preserving the same gravity; "it was a fish bone."

Barbed-Wire Telephones. Clarence and John Taylor, living 3 miles apart, on the Taylor farms, in East Dickinson county, Kansas, have solved the communication problem. At eaching fine telephone instruments to the barbed-wire fence that connects their places, they have an easy method of communication. During the recent storm, when weeds and debris were piled on the fence, it made no difference in the transmission of sound and they talked with ease. They will send the line two and one-half miles to Ipswich Station, on the Rock Island, and receive market reports and news by telephone. The whole neighborhood is fenced with barbed wire, and several other instruments will doubtless be put in, making a large private system, with some degree of success.

ECENTRIC PHYSICIANS.

Some Quizz Prescriptions Given by Them to Patients

'Abernethy's prescriptions were at made with the belief that physical ailments resulted from abuse of the stomach.

"Go home," he exclaimed to a patient who confessed to excessive eating every day, "eat less, and there will be nothing the matter with you."

On another occasion the surgeon having listened somewhat impatiently to the frivolous details of a nervous patient, returned a shilling of his guineas fee, saying sternly, "There, madame, go and buy a skipping-rope—that is all you want."

The eccentric Dr. Scott once ordered a sick man to dine early, drink no more beer, and discontinue the use of snuff. After a while the patient returned, complaining that he was not getting well.

"You still take snuff," said Dr. Scott instantly detecting that his directions were not wholly obeyed—and the man was forced to admit the fact. "Then go off and die," said the doctor.

It was a good prescription—the man went away, obeyed previous orders, and lived to be ninety.

Dr. John Bell, of Edinburg, knew how to reprove illiberality in his patients. On one occasion he received from a rich laird a check for $250 for services which he regarded as deserving of much higher remuneration.

On leaving the house Dr. Bell met the butler, and giving him the check said, "Here, you have had a good deal of trouble opening the door for me—there is a trifle for you."

The astonished butler took the check to his master, who, understanding the hint, sent the surgeon a check for three times the first amount.

"Well, sir," demanded the presiding member of the Navy Board to a young applicant, "what do you know of the science of your profession?" Don't keep the board waiting, sir. Supposing a man was brought to you during action with his arms and legs shot off, what would you do? Make haste.

"By Jove, sir," responded the young surgeon, "I should pitch him overboard, and go on to someone to whom I could be of more service."

The reverend board burst out laughing, and the applicant received his certificate for his presence of mind in the face of such a question.

Malay Shark Hunting.

The Malays have a peculiar way of hunting the shark. A man will remain stationary on the water to invite attack. As the creature rolls over to bite the wily Malay glides out of his way with a few deft strokes of the left hand, while with the right he deliberately plants a pointed skewer between the open jaws of the expectant shark. The result is simple, but surprising.

Malay Shark Hunting.

The shark is, of course, unable to close its mouth, and the water just rushes down his throat and drowns him. It requires the greatest possible coolness and nerve to kill a shark in this way, but the Malays look upon it as a favorite recreation and an exciting sport. When the monster is dead its slayer dexterously climbs onto its back saddle-wise, and then, digging his knife into the shark's head to serve as a support and means of balance, the Malay uses his own legs as paddles, and so rides the carcass back to the boat.
