WHITE IN ALL ITS SHADES FOR WINTER WEAR.

Filmy Fabrics That Delight the Soul—The Pretty Russian Style—Smartest Thing in Winter Coats—A Paris Fad and the Overworked Telephone.

White is again to be immensely fashionable this winter, and already among the gowns intended for both day and evening wear white is the predominant note of color, strange as the statement may seem.

The street gowns—that is, the reception gowns of white cloth in all its many shades of white, and it is astonishing how many different shades of white there are—

are even more beautiful in fact than last season, and there have been an unusual number of different styles for these cloth gowns.

Besides those intended for street and reception wear are the theatre gowns in white cloth or in different white materials, but none of them in any way compares in beauty of workmanship to the white gowns intended for the evening.

Among the so-called dinner gowns that are here illustrated are none which later in the season would be considered elaborate enough for dinner gowns.

For ten cents, exemplifies the long shoulder seam and skirted coat, two features that contribute conspicuously to the make-up of the new Fall suit.

The blouse may be made with or without the skirt, and is fitted by shoulder and under-arm seams.

Quite the Smartest Thing in Motor Coats. The blouse may be made with or without the skirt, and is fitted by shoulder and under-arm seams.

Lace and Chiffon Combinations. Combining lace with chiffon, mouseline de soie, silk voile or any of the very sheer materials that look like gossamer and can literally stand the test of the fairy book tales.

When Dreams Come True. They Are Great Things When Taken in Connection With Women's Intuition.

"I tell you what," said the man with the receding chin and the abbreviated forehead, on the rear platform of a Fourteenth street car.

"Well, anyhow, I went out to the races yesterday. Don't know a race horse from a bucket of whitewash myself, and always lose trying to beat them, but my wife got me started this time by a dream she had night before last.

"Are you dead sure that it was a chestnut horse that made all the rest of those horses in your dream look like aluminum dollars?"

"Well, on my way down town I bought one of these late sporting papers that publishes the racing entries, along with the colors of the horses, and I found that there was only one chestnut horse entered for the running yesterday.

"Did you flunk on playing the chestnut?" asked one of the listeners.

"Not on your life," answered the man with the receding chin. "The favorite, the horse that I put my $20 down on, buck-jumped in and won by two Philadelphia blocks, and that chestnut pie dream, was running yet when I collected my $60 and came home in a calash. I tell you what, women's dreams, and their intuition, are great things when you come to think of them, but—"

More Truth Than Politeness. Rich Wife—My dear, what would you do if I should suddenly lose all my money? Hubby—As I pleased. I don't dare to now.

crumbe and other dainties which she has overlooked, and the sparrows scratch around to find them with quite as much familiarity as if they were at work in some rack yard.

"Julia," said the old gentleman reproachfully, "if I am not mistaken you gave that young man a kiss." "I did no such thing," returned the young woman with emphasis. "It was a trade."

"Paw," asked the little boy, "what is a silver wedding?" After thoughtfully stroking his magnificent beard, the Chicago Populist answered: "A silver wedding is when a woman has been married sixteen years to one man."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"I'm sure that I recognize my own faults," she murmured, with downcast eyes. "Of course you do," he replied, confidently, "there are so few of them." Then she realized beyond all haunting doubts that he was the most desirable among the many who sought her hand. —Detroit Free Press.

Good at Arithmetic.—Lady (in employment office)—As there are only my husband and myself in the family, I think you ought to be willing to come for less than you ask. There are only two persons to cook for. Domestic—But, mum, when I'm wid you there'd be three.—New York Weekly.

Born Without Nerves.

The Chinaman can write all day, he can work all day, he can stand for a whole day in one position, weaving, hammering gold, or cutting ivory, without once being attacked by nervousness. This peculiarity makes it very apparent in early youth. The Chinaman can bear any kind of bodily exercise. Sport and play are to him unnecessary labor. He can sleep anywhere and in any position—amid thundering machines, deafening noises, the cry of children, or the wrangle of grown people; on the ground, in bed, or on a chair. In his own innocent way the Chinaman is almost a Sybarite.—Pearson's Weekly.

PIGRAMS ON MAN

Every man is a quotation from all his ancestors.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Man is an ungrateful being in love, bounty loses instead of winning him.—Washington Irving.

How old the men would feel if they were only half as virtuous as they pretend!—Madame Le Strange.

When our vices leave us we flatter ourselves that we are leaving them.—Francis de la Rochefoucauld.

Men are less afraid of injuring one who awakes love than one who inspires fear.—Niccolo Machiavelli.

It is always incomprehensible to a man that a woman should ever refuse an offer of marriage.—Jane Austen.

A man must be faithless to something—either to a woman, or his God, or his firmest belief.—John Oliver Hobbes.

Yet woman is not capable of friendship; but, say ye men, which of you is capable of friendship?—Frederick Nietzsche.

AT THE ZOO.

The Earliest Size of the Elephant's Foot.

Princess, the zoo elephant at Lincoln park, Chicago, was standing in her shed awaiting from side to side and casting a half-bushel or more of hard and new-cut grass over her brow back at every twist of her trunk.

"Look at her feet," piped one of the boys. "I'll bet they're as big around as peck measures."

He said it so loud that the whole crowd heard him.

"They're nearer the size of a bushel basket," put in a pompous-looking fat man. "I was guessing, I should say they were at least a yard around."

"More'n that," answered a small man in spectacles. "I measured the track of an elephant that passed through the town where I was brought up, and it was very nearly three feet and a half in circumference."

At this two of the boys began to laugh, as if they didn't believe it.

"Well, just look at the size of that elephant's leg," blustered the man in spectacles; "she may not be as big as some elephants, but I'll warrant her foot'll measure three feet and a half."

"I should say it wouldn't go more than two feet at the most," put in a tall man with a big gold watch chain.

The discussion waxed warmer every moment, and the guesses varied all the way from eighteen inches up to three feet and a half, the spectacled man declaring again and again that Princess' foot measured between three and a half and four feet, if it measured an inch.

Just then one of the sub-keepers came into the shed, and Princess half turned to greet him, a welcome was in her trunk. One tall man who had the appearance of an engineer, pulled a tape measure through the fence, and the keeper knelt close to Princess' great foot and stretched the tape around it, while the crowd held its breath in expectation.

The keeper straightened up, "Four feet and two inches," he reported.

Even the spectacled man was astonished, and it was some time before he was able to gasp: "There, I told you so!"

The crowd parted, having had convincing evidence of an elephant's hugeness.

In spite of her size, however, Princess is one of the best-natured elephants in the world. She will stretch forward to the full length of her chain and eat an endless number of peanuts, popcorn by the peck, bananas and anything else that her admirers will give her.

Just above her in the roof of her shed a large family of sparrows has made its home. It is within reach of her trunk, but she never offers to interfere with the birds as they dart in and out. Quite recently some of the braver members of the family have discovered that the great brown mountain under them makes a good feeding ground. In throwing up grass and dirt on her back, Princess frequently scoops up bits of popcorn, bread
