Addressing his constituents in the Municipal Buildings, he said landlordism was ruled out of existence by an act of Parlia ment. A more astonishing thing still, they compelled the landlords to sign the death warrant of landlordism, and they compelled both English parties and both English Houses of Parliament to unite in placing on the Statute Book the first principals of the United Irish League and the Land League. But with this new land act they had not come to the end. They were in the beginning of greater and grander achievments for Ireland.
