We Are Selling Out All

WINTER GARMENTS

AT A LIVELY CLIP!

Our January Out Price Sale has more than realized our expectations and made hundreds of our patrons happy. "Such fine and beautifully made garments and such extraordinary under value." Expressions we heard from all sides. Clean up stocks, regardless of price, "that's the orders." Nothing to remain from one season to another. Hence our stocks are always up to date. From such strict rule naturally follows between season bargains. All winter garments must find new owners, no matter about the loss. About 700 women's outergarments and 500 children's coats, each and every garment a positive bargain. We are now casting our thoughts and energies springwise and making arrangements to lead as usual on fashions and values for the coming season. We must sell everything that has a touch of winter, and it will go. They must be sold whether it be a fur, cloth or velour coat, cape, suit or skirt, or any winter garment in the store, so the sooner you get around the better chance you have of getting the garment that best suits you, and the price. JUDGE FOR YOURSELF. If you can beat us we do not expect your patronage.

Religion.

Religion is sunshine, is strength, peace, food, drink, sleep. It is a mother's arms enfolding her child. It is the helmsman at the wheel. It is the pole star which directs our course when we toil to reach the mountain's summit. When the day is done we hear the angels sing, "He is risen!" and after the sleep of death we follow the echo of their voices until the gates are reached and heaven changes from a dream to a reality.

The Late Bishop Bradley.
Right Rev. Dennis M. Bradley, bishop of Manchester, N. H., who died on Dec. 17, aged fifty-seven years, was the dean of the suffragan bishops of the province over which Archbishop Williams, the metropolitan. He was a close and able friend and collaborer of the venerable Archbishop Williams. His judgment on church affairs was considered sound and conservative, and his opinion was often sought. Bishop Bradley was a native of Castle Island, County Kerry, Ireland. He came to this country when eight years old with his widowed mother and was educated in the public schools here and at Holy Cross college, Worcester. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1871 and assigned to Portland, Me. In 1884, when a new diocese embracing all of New Hampshire was formed, Father Bradley was made bishop. At that time the Roman Catholics of the state numbered 45,000. There are now 100,000 in the state, and Bishop Bradley leaves an excellent parochial system as a monument to his labors.

Bishop of Columbus.
His Holiness has approved the nomination of the Congregation of the Propaganda of Rev. James J. Hartley of Steubenville, O., as bishop of Columbus in succession to the Rev. Henry Moeller, recently appointed coadjutor archbishop of Cincinnati, O.

THE PUNGENT CLOVE.
Its Use in Cookery and the Medicinal Properties of Its Oil.

The clove is a well and widely known spice of which millions of pounds are marketed and consumed every year. In cookery it is employed either by itself or combined with other spices in innumerable sweet preparations, such as cakes, pies, preserves, puddings, sauces, cordials and candies.

As it is very pungent, care must be taken not to use it too freely. It is a valuable addition to the flavor and keeping qualities of both sweet and sour pickles. It is excellent also for the flavoring of certain meat dishes, as croquettes, boned and pressed fowl, etc. The baked or boiled ham, after the rind has been taken off, acquires a much enjoyed flavor from the cloves with which it is the custom of some cooks to dot the surface.

The medicinal properties of cloves are similar to those of allspice and cinnamon, and the oil, emulsified or diluted in some way, is said to be an excellent and quickly acting remedy for nausea and stomach cramps, and it is generally prescribed for toothache. Wherever it can be conveniently employed this oil is an excellent antiseptic and preventive of molds and mildews and is also, to some extent, a repellent of insects.

The clove, from the French clove, a nail, is the flower bud of a tall and beautiful evergreen of the myrtle family distinguished botanically as Caryophyllus aromaticus. The elongate part is the tube of the calyx, while the four parted head is externally the four sepals inclosing the rounded corolla, the divisions of which are united at their tips and cover the clustered stamens, also arranged in groups of four. By soaking cloves for a time in warm water all these parts may be unfolded for examination. The blossoms, when allowed to develop, are deep crimson, arranged in clusters and of a most entrancing fragrance, and relieved by the profuse dark green, pointed, oval leaves, are very showy. The succeeding fruit resembles a small olive in form and when ripe is bright red or purple.

The clove tree is a native of the Moluccas, but is grown throughout the East Indian archipelago, in some parts of Africa and of the West Indies, where it is highly esteemed as an ornamental evergreen, as well as for its choice product.

In preparation for market the buds are carefully picked while still green and slowly dried in the smoke of wood fires until they assume the brown color of the familiar spice. The ripe fruit is also, to some extent, dried and prepared for use and is sold as "mother of cloves," as are also the fruit stalks, but neither of these compares in pungency and aroma to the flower buds.—St. Louis Republic.
