GAVAN.—On Dec. 9 a largely attended meeting of the tenants of the Farnham estate was held in the townland of Graugusson, near Ballinabough, for the purpose of considering a letter from Mr. Norris Goddard, the solicitor, who stated that he, on behalf of Lord Farnham, was prepared to receive any offer for the purchase of their holdings. They would have to bear in mind that it is not his wish to sell, and therefore it is not as if he were offering the place for sale, but the tenants have approached him, stating their desire to buy. Therefore it is but reasonable to ask them what price they are willing to give. The rents on the estate are, in this opinion, very low. If the tenants are anxious to do the best thing he assumed they are prepared to offer such prices as will guarantee to Lord Farnham, at present investment rates, his present net income at least.

The death lately in a Kilrush hospital of a remarkably old lady with the peculiar cognomen of Biddy Belfast removes a figure that during life gained some notoriety in West Clare because of the extraordinary dwelling place she selected and occupied for years. Her home was a deep recess between two arches of the bridge in the ancient village of Doonbeg. Ingress and egress were possible by a little embankment, on either side of which the stream rushed in its course. There was at times danger in the approach to this unusual habitation. The woman and her care were the chief curiosity of the village and attracted much attention from the stranger and the tourist. It may be mentioned that at Doonbeg there still dwells an extraordinary old woman, Biddy Thunder, who lives high up in the tower of a ruined castle facing the Atlantic.

On Dec. 14 several parts of the Northwest ward of the city of Cork were illuminated in honor of the centenary of the birth of Gerald Griffin. Everywhere the greatest interest was manifested in the proceedings, but nowhere was it more evinced than in Gerald Griffin street, the residents of which showed their respect for the memory of him whose name their street bears. It presented a unique spectacle and one not soon to be forgotten. Nearly all the houses had their windows illuminated with fairy lamps of every color, and four electric arc lamps erected at the upper end of the street in front of the cathedral gave a very striking effect to the illumination, and especially to those of St. Mary's hall. Throughout the whole district large flags were suspended from side to side of the streets. Six tar barrels were kept ablaze up to a late hour, and bands paraded the streets playing selections of Griffin airs. All the windows of the North monastery and the schools were brilliantly lighted, and gaslight illuminations were erected over the gateway. The bells of the cathedral joined in the universal joy and greatly added to the enthusiasm.

The tenants on the Weir's estate, on which the celebrated Knockalass farm is situated, have been informed by the receiver that their farms will be sold to them at seventeen years' purchase. The tenants have made no move, but intend to purchase through the estates commissioners or congested districts board with a view to having their holdings, which are small, enlarged. Those holdings were examined by land commissioner valuers, and offers similar to the present ones were made to the tenants twelve months ago, but they did not accept.
