EAST RUSH

On Thursday evening June 30th 1904 as the last rays of the setting sun were slowly sinking into the western sky, the sad news of death, visited the home of the Fagan and called away his beloved daughter Mary aged 30 years and two months. Miss Fagan had been suffering from the effects of la grippe, which finally developed into quickly consumption. With patience she suffered much while every hope that youth's bright morning and before her was slowly stifled by the serious effects of this sad malady. Nothing was left undone by her parents and friends to allow the untimely death which seemed inevitable. So the voiceless wailers whispered over the crystal sea "come dearest child thy Saviour calls the home." And bidding adieu to each loved member of the family surrounding her bedside she passed peacefully into the arms of eternity where all is rest with life and love. The funeral of the deceased was held Saturday morning at 10 o'clock from St. Joseph's church, where solemn mass of Requiem was celebrated by her cousin Rev. J. B. Dran of Auburn assisted by Rev. M. J. Cuney of Honeoye Falls as deacon, Rev. Father Neville sub-deacon, Rev. Father Dougherty master of ceremonies.

Among those who mourn her loss are her beloved parents two brothers, Joseph of West Henrietta and William of Rush, and three sisters, Margaret Fagan of Rush, Mrs. H. Dwyer of Honeoye Falls, and Sister M. Agnes of Nazareth convent, half street, Rochester, to whom our heartfelt sympathy extends in this sad hour of bereavement.

Death is a mysterious bridge which we all must cross, our mortal bodies are the toll which must be paid. Let us so live that we will not fear the summons which we all must meet but will leave this earthly pilgrimage to enter our true eternal home.

FABIOLA.

which we apply ourselves in a variety of ways: some read, some write, some labour in the gardens; and I assure you no hired workman ever toiled harder than those spontaneous agriculturists. We meet at different times, and sing beautiful songs together, and read most approving books, and receive oral instructions from eloquent teachers. Our meals are indeed very temperate; we live entirely on vegetables, but I have already found out that laughing is quite compatible with lentils, and that good cheer does not necessarily mean good fare.

"Why, you are turned complete Pythagoreans. I thought that was quite out of date. But it must be a most economical system," remarked Fabiola, with a knowing look.

"Ha! you cunning thing!" answered the judge, "so you really think that this may be a saving plan after all? But it won't be, for we have taken a most desperate resolution."

"Nothing less than this. We are determined that there shall not be a poor person within our reach; this winter we shall endeavor to clothe all the naked and feed the hungry, and attend to all the sick about. All our economy shall go for this."

"It is indeed a very generous though very new idea in our times; and no doubt, you will be well lauded at for your pains, and abused on all sides. They will even say worse of you than they do now, if it were possible, but it is not."

"How so?"

"Do not be offended if I tell you, but already they have gone so far as to hint that you were a christian. But this, I assure you, I have everywhere indignantly contradicted."

Chromatius smiled, and said, "Why an indignant contradiction, my dear child?"

"Because, to be sure, I know you and Thurlius, and Nicostratus, and that dear dumb Zee, too well to admit for a moment, that you had adopted the compound of stupidity and knavery called by that name."

"Let me ask you one question. Have you taken the trouble of reading any Christian writings, by which you might know what is really held and done by that despised body?"

"Oh, not I indeed! I would not waste my time over them; I could not have patience to learn anything about them. I scorn them too much, as enemies of all intellectual progress, as doubtful citizens, as credulous to the last degree, and as sanctioning every anomalous crime, ever to give myself a chance of a nearer acquaintance with them."

"Well, dear Fabiola I thought just the same about them once, but I have much altered my opinion of late."

"This is indeed strange, since as Perfect of the city, you must have had to punish many of these wretched people for their constant transgression of the laws."

A cloud came over the cheerful countenance of the old man, and a tear stood in his eye. He thought of St. Paul, who had once persecuted the church of God. Fabiola saw the change, and was distressed. In the most affectionate manner she said to him, "I have said something very thoughtless, I fear, or stirred up recollections of what must be painful to your kind heart. Forgive me dear Chromatius, and let us talk of something else. One purpose of my visit to you was to ask you if you knew of anyone going immediately to Rome. I have heard from several quarters of my father's projected journey, and I am anxious to write to him, least he repeat what he did before—go without taking leave of me to spare me pain."

"Yes, replied Chromatius, there is a young man starting early tomorrow morning. Come into the library and write your letter; the bearer is probably there."

They returned to the house and entered an apartment on the ground floor, full of book chests. At a table in the middle of the room a young man was seated, transcribing a large volume, which on seeing a stranger enter, he closed and put aside.

"Torquatus," said Chromatius, addressing him, "this lady desires to send a letter to her father in Rome."

"It will always give me great pleasure," replied the young man "to serve the noble Fabiola or her illustrious father."

"What, do you know them," asked the judge, rather surprised.
