REDUCING WEIGHT.

What a Middle-Aged Woman Did to Reduce Her Bulk Twenty-five Pounds.

"A successful reduction of weight which came under my observation," said a physical culture teacher, "was that of a noted platform speaker. At forty years old her bulk greatly interfered with her work. Being a woman of determination, she set about getting rid of the burden and at the end of the month the scales showed a reduction of four pounds, while at the end of six months she had reduced her weight twenty-five pounds. When telling me of her success she remarked that she had never felt better, and she looked fit. This is the way it was done."

Breakfast was omitted and the time usually spent over that meal was used in the air, taking a brisk walk. On getting out of bed in the morning a quick sponge bath in cold water was followed by a brisk rub down. Then, clad in a short walking skirt, soft felt hat and comfortable shoes she started out and walked briskly for half an hour, by her watch. On returning home she engaged in her regular occupations until 12 o'clock, when a light luncheon was eaten. This consisted of a small cupful of clear broth, broiled steak or lean chops, one vegetable, but never potatoes, Graham bread, fresh or stewed fruit or a green salad. A moderate amount of water was drunk during the day, but no liquors were taken at meals. Rich, greasy foods, fat meats, sweets and cereals, except in very small quantities, were strictly tabooed at all times. She confessed that for the first week she felt the need of breakfast greatly, and to overcome the faint feeling resorted to a glass of hot water slipped slowly on returning from the walk. Since reducing her weight twenty-five pounds she has taken up breakfast again, but it consists of one baked tart apple and a very small piece of dry toast. The reduction seems permanent, since her weight has remained the same for the past three years and her health all that can be desired. While this is a method within the reach of all, I would suggest that the change in diet be more gradually made, for the radical change may be too severe for all persons."

Sunbaths and Rest Cure.

The "rest cures" have created a new fad among the wealthy women who have been making visits to them of late to recuperate from the strain of the social season. This is the scheme of living outdoors as much as possible and in the manner in which it is worked savors of the luxury of the times. The things brought into play usually include a stout cot, well padded, and placed permanently in some sunny but secluded nook in the immediate neighborhood of the country house in which the devotee lives. When it is not in use the cot is covered with a heavy rubber blanket to protect it from the wet. When the "rest cure" patient elects to use it, which is usually for an hour in the morning and again in the afternoon, a maid removes the blanket and the "patient" lies stretched on the cot in the broad sunshine with a veil tied over her eyes to keep out the glare of light. A more thorough cure of this kind is effected by having a high wooden inclosure built on the grounds in which the sun shines, but the wind is cut off. When midday has one of these structures she has a cot within its walls on which she reclines for her sunbath.

Girls Should Not

Think that generosity always requires public acknowledgment.

Regard existence outside of matrimony a draggy waste.

Make a point of letting men know the mischief of which they are capable.

Draw the lines so tightly that a man is disposed to regard love as a burden.

Show she has views which are deep rooted and determined.

Expect a man to play the gallant as though he were on exhibition.

Suppose that a few tears will secure pardon for neglect at all times.

Boast of having absolute control of a man's leisure hours.

Make life tedious to a man by constantly demanding evidence of his regard.

Take too much for granted in a man's silence.

Substitute for Fly Paper.

It is said that the rose geranium is obnoxious to flies. Some housekeepers declare that a few good-sized plants of this variety, set in a window, make a perfect fly screen.

HONEYMOON LETTERS.

"P. S.—Having a grand time. Marriage is the only thing, Lynn. Better try it—that is, if you can find a girl who comes within a mile of Sue."

"Where shall we have the conflagration?" called Bess fifteen minutes later. "My contribution is ready."

"Just a second," responded Lynn from the depths of Bob's desk. "I have the bundle of old receipts tied up with dead flowers all right, but can't find that long white glove from which he got his sister's size. Oh, yes, here it is."

In another minute the bonfire was flickering.

"I wonder," mused the groom's chin as he added Sue's note to the fuel, "if you will ever find a man the very least little bit like Bob?"

"Or you a girl who comes within a mile of Sue?" responded the bride's sister.

Mr. and Mrs. Bob have declared ever since that they were responsible for the match.

Bits About Bachelors.

Some are bachelors because they get too well, others because they love too many.
