DOWN.—This year's Feis Chaisleain Nuaidh eclipsed its predecessors. To those who were present at previous feiseanna at the foot of the Mourne mountains and witnessed their dimensions this may be difficult of belief, but it is a fact. In scope the 1904 feis was the most ambitious organized by the Castlewellan Coisde Ceanntair. The number of entries in the various competitions was larger, and the attendance was far in excess of that in previous years. There was an industrial revival part in this year's business, and it was a credit to the Gaelic leaguers and the exhibitors. Feis committee—Rev. William Dempsey, Newcastle, president Castlewellan Coisde Ceanntair; Rev. P. J. McEvoy, Hilltown, vice president Coisde Ceanntair; G. Fitzpatrick, Clanvaraghan, treasurer Coisde Ceanntair; James McArdle and Martin E. McCafferkey, secretaries Coisde Ceanntair; Rev. J. Hassan, Castlewellan; Rev. J. "That we call upon the Castlerea Harrismorris board of guardians to build laborers' cottages in Hazelhill, as they are very much required on account of the insanitary condition of the town cottages and the high rent asked for them. We think they have plenty of money and ought to devote some of it to that good object."

Although the Gaelic league as at present constituted is of comparatively recent date, yet as far back as 1807 a Gaelic society was formed in Dublin, formally couched on Dec. 11, 1807, with Patrick Lynch as secretary. Lynch, in addition to being an Irish scholar, was a "philomath" and printer. He was a tolerable musician and was sent by the McCracken family of Belfast in 1807 to collect old Irish folk songs and take down airs, with a view of being published by Bunting. In Westport Lynch succeeded in collecting at least 100 Irish songs. His patroness, Miss May McCracken, was the sister of the patriot Henry Joy McCracken. Among the members of the Gaelic society in 1807 were Edward O'Reilly, Father Denis Taaffe, Father Paul O'Brien, Theophilus O'Flanagan and William Hilda, all excellent Irish scholars.

The death of Patrick Geraghty of Buckwheat took place on July 27.

ROSCOMMON. — The departure of the Rev. Father Brennan from Castlerea caused great regret. Since he came to Castlerea he has been an indefatigable worker on behalf of the Irish Ireland movement.

On July 29 died John Nolan, Castlecoole, Ballinagare, aged sixty years.

SLIGO.—A new telegraph office in connection with Templeboy postoffice was opened Aug. 3. A collection of letters from Kinaushenter letter box for dispatch by the evening mail from Templeboy postoffice was established, and in addition to the morning delivery an evening delivery to Kinaushenter is made at 6:15. Mr. Hayes, Templeboy, had these changes made.

The annual excursion of the Sligo branch of the Irish National Foresters (Lily of Lough Gill) was held on July 31 to Dundalk. Three hundred of the brothers, with their friends, assembled at the Sligo station, accompanied by their fife and drum band. Among the officers in charge were Brother Scanlan, chief ranger; Brother T. Walsh, subchief ranger; Brother J. Carroll, senior beadle; Brother Thomas Flanagan, junior beadle; Brothers Shields and Conboy, senior and junior woodwards; Brother James Healy, secretary. Brothers Thomas Begley, Michael O'Kane and Patrick Kelly, trustees.
