ALCHEMY AS IT IS TODAY.

Charcoal Yields 5,000,000 in One Year in Acetic Acid and Alcohol.

The chemist examines and scrutinizes every kind of waste the factory puts out, in search for something that can be made of use.

The by-products, having been thus called to the aid of the industries, have grown to such proportions as to outrank some of the older interests.

The process then becomes, not one for the production of charcoal, but for the manufacture of wood alcohol and acetic acid.
