fels, as Father O'Mulholland stated in Irish, was to give the children and other students of Irish a stimulus in their work and to afford the public an opportunity of judging of their progress and enjoying an intellectual and social treat which the brilliant genius, the quick wit and humor of the Gael expressed in the language of Ireland. The entertainment consisted of Irish story telling, Irish singing group and solo, Irish recitation Irish dialogues, Irish dancing (reel, step and horn pipe), piano duet (Irish airs), band selections, violin selections, English (group and solo) singing, English recitation, tambourine troupe and star drill and hoop song, and there was fun in plenty. It was marvelous that the training of the children in such a varied programme could be brought to perfection in so brief a time.
