The death of a Donegal farmer, Patrick Harkin, Gweebarra Bay, was the subject of a recent magisterial investigation at Adara. Patrick Kennedy, an other young farmer, had been arrested in connection with the tragedy. Witnesses stated that both engaged in a fight with fists, then closed on each other and fell. Deceased rose, but a minute afterward he sank, dying soon from a dislocation of the neck, which, it was stated, might be the result of Harkin butting Kennedy with his head The magistrates refused information and Kennedy was discharged.

The following extraordinary incldent took place recently in the mountains south of Glenties. A farmer received by letter an order for $25 from Casey, J. O'Mahoney, M. O'Brien, R. MONAGHAN,-The tenants residing on the property of the Murray-Kerr estate, Newbliss, have completed the terms of purchase. First term tenants, four and one-quarter years' purchase; nonjudicial tenants to be dealt with in dividually; evicted tenants to be reinstated and 81/2 per cent to be paid on purchase money until money is advanced by the government; sporting, mineral and turbary reserved to tenants, but Captain Irwin to have a life privilege in sporting rights. On March 4 the Monaghan mystery was solved by the finding of the body of (harles Trainor, who was missing from his home at Tonysillogagh, near Monaghan, since Feb. 22. A reward had been offered by Trainor's relatives for the recovery of the body. It was known that on the night he was last seen in Monaghan Trainor intended staying at an outside farm he holds at Tyholland, but where his hat was found and blood stains discovered was in an entirely different direction. A son of the missing man and a man named McElmeel were dragging close to the bridge spanning the Blackwater river at Baliyalbany Presbyterian church when the former caught the body with irons. He called to McElmeel, who dragged the body out. Word was sent to the police barrack, and Thomas Mc-Cabe had the remains conveyed to a house pending an inquest. It is evident that in making his way home Trainor mistook his road and instead of going over the bridge at the Blackwater took a turn to the right in the darknoss and walked into the water, which at that spot is deep. There were blood marks on his face, but otherwise no external marks of violence. A sum of 11s. 8d. was found in the pockets. WICKLOW .--- The tenants on the estate of Cionliffe college have offered to purchase their farms at twenty years' purchase of the annual rents.

The estates commissioners have brought about a satisfactory termination to the Cronesaliagh eviction case. which was a historic incident in the land war in County Wicklow. Over twenty years ago the Freney family were evicted from their home on the Ellis property at Cronesallagh, between Aughrim and Rathdrum. It was early in the land agitation and the eviction was a widely exciting proceeding. prominent among the spectators being Miss Fanny Parnell, who, as well as her great brother, Charles Stewart Parnell, took a keen interest in the weifare of the family until the time of their death. The farm, after lying derelict for years, was taken up, but the Freneys never lost hope and kept in touch with the national organization. They have now had their reward, for lately importance of facilitating the passing P. Freney, the oldest of the family, was put into possession of over 150 acres of a farm portion of Whaley abbey. He had a tough fight to obtain redress, but the strong local feeling behind his claims insured triumph in the dad, and the victory is a great tribute to organized opinion, which found expression throughout the Rathdrum branch of the United Irish league. In addition to getting a large farm from the estates commissioners he had also been the recipient of a substantial free grant for stocking and building purposes. It was for the Freney family the first Land league but was erected doing most important work for the in Ireland, so that the case is historic in many senses.
