The North Antrim Mining syndicate lately struck the main coal. This splendid seam is at a depth of 240 feet, five feet six inches in thickness and of excellent quality. The seam was found in No. 1 Ballysoy pit, three miles from Ballycastle. At the end of August last something bearing the appearance of a series of gimlet holes had been struck into the earth as far as 300 feet. It was from these penetrations and an investigation of the results that the minds directing operations had observations confirmed, and were satisfied that millions of tons of coal awaited the pick of the miner. Now that all the company's expectations have been realized, the period is at hand when enterprise and expenditure will receive reward. The people of Ballycastle may look forward to a revival of that almost forgotten period when the late Hugh Boyd brought his business capacities to bear upon its developments at the old White mine. It is interesting to know that the syndicate intends to utilize the Ironstone, which will afford a good deal of employment.

DONEGAL.—When it became known that the Rev. Peter McNelis, lately ordained for the archdiocese of Armagh, was to arrive at his native village of Malinbeg, Glencolumbkille, the young people turned out to do honor and respect to their former companion. Early in the evening of July 3 preparations were begun in the shape of bonfires and illuminations, and, though the hour of arrival was late, the people waited, and on every eminence tar barrels and bonfires were lighted, and in every window lights were exhibited. Father McNelis was delighted to find his young companions showing such respect for him. He spoke affectionately to them and bestowed his blessing on all. FERMANAGH.—Dr. P. J. Timmins of Boston was the principal speaker at a meeting of the South Fermanagh divisional executive, United Irish league, lately held in Enniskillen. He said if history had taught one thing more clearly than others it was that unity was most essential for Irishmen. He would be glad to report on his return that very good value had been given for aid extended by America to Ireland. The Irish people were represented in parliament by men who truly represented them. It was no longer the case of Ireland being misrepresented by the landlords. That change might be set down as an asset which would repay the Irish race for efforts put forth for thirty-five years. The evil weed of religious discord had been planted and fostered by the landlords, and unwittingly for their victims fight for them, the kingdoms come, while they were robbing them of the riches of the Irish kingdom. One of the most pleasant treats he had since his arrival in Ireland was meeting with the representatives of his native division of Fermanagh. He did not think he could give them any instruction in the conduct of political matters after the brilliant exhibition of talent in that line which he had seen and heard that day. On motion of Thomas Gavin, Rev. Philip McGinity, Newtownbutler was appointed to represent the executive on the national directory I. I. L. Among those present were Rev. Thomas Duffy, Lisnaskea; Rev. John Tierney, Enniskillen; Rev. Father Ward, Belcoo; J. Jordan, M. P.; E. M. Flanagan, Lisnaskea; J. Mulligan, coroner; P. McMahon, and others.

T., one of the prominent men in the district and who has taken a foremost part in the Gaelic revival movement. The deepest sympathy is expressed with Mr. Barry in his great affliction."

A sad incident happened near Kanturk on July 8. A young married man named Linehan was walking by the river side with his infant child in his arms when his attention was attracted by seeing his mistress' cows crossing the river and commencing to fight with other cows. He placed the child down on the bank and ran to turn back the cows. This occupied him a little while, and when he returned he was shocked to observe the little one lying dead some distance from where he placed it. There were a few marks on the child's face, as if it had been horned or trampled. It appears that while the father was absent some cows recrossed the river and trampled the child in their passage through the field.

The staffs of the Cork Examiner had an enjoyable day's outing on July 8, when their annual excursion to Ballycotton was enjoyed.

The appointment of Rev. Father O'Regan, curate of Boherbee, to the pastorship of Spa gave great pleasure to the people in Duhallon, particularly to those living west of Kanturk. He had spent ten years in Boherbee. He took the liveliest interest in the Gaelic revival movement in the parish, and was an ardent supporter of the Gaelic league and the principle of an Irish Ireland.

A splendid exhibition of crafts and manufactures genuinely Irish in its scope and object and one from which instructive lessons can be learned by all interested in the resuscitation of Irish industries was opened in the city of Limerick on July 9 by his excellency the Earl of Aberdeen, the lord lieutenant of Ireland. The promoters chose the name of the Munster Industrial exhibition to connote the area with which their operations were immediately concerned and in so limiting the committee was actuated by motives which appeal to anybody acquainted with the condition which unhappily prevailed in industrial circles in the two provinces. When the opening had been officially accomplished the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen and their other guests were entertained at luncheon. An excellent concert was given, at which all the sweet old Irish airs were rendered vocally and instrumentally.

She immediately called for assistance, and after an exciting chase the intruder was captured. It is at present a prisoner in the zoo where its scope for wandering is prematurely closed.

There was an audience at the Round room, Rotunda, on June 25 that crowded to excess every part of the building for the concert in connection with the Moy Lea bazaar to raise funds for the improvement of the Church of St. Laurence O'Toole. The artists who took part in it were all vocalists and instrumentalists of the highest distinction, while the items contributed by Miss Leona Conolly were among the most interesting features of the entertainment as Miss Conolly proved herself a violinist of very considerable talent and power.

Having succeeded in freeing the cable the young man sent up a signal to his brother to start the engine to bring up the wagon. The injured man's brother did so rather quickly and ere John Kane was aware of it his foot was caught in a coil of wire. The speed at which the rope was going up jerked his leg backward up to his shoulder. The sudden wrench and the pain caused him to shout. His cries attracted the attention of a lad named Charles Redmond, aged sixteen years, who, noticing the plight of his fellow worker, ran instantly to the belt from the engine and threw it off. Bailey, aged fifteen, a relative of the Scotts, losing their lives. Bailey was a student at Portora Royal school, Enniskillen, and was practicing swimming for the forthcoming aquatic fixtures. For the purpose he set out along with Scott to go to Lough Eyes, half a mile distant from their home in Derryhoney. They did not return at their usual time, and Robert Scott proceeded to the lake and found Bailey's clothing on the shore. His worst suspicions were then aroused, and he sought the aid of the constabulary to make a search. At 4:30 the following morning Sergeant Carson and a man named Gilroy found young Scott's body, fully dressed, and half an hour later they succeeded in bringing Bailey's body to the surface. The bodies were close to each other, ten yards from the shore, at a spot where the water is ten feet deep. Scott was a trooper in the North of Ireland Imperial yeomanry, and had only returned from the annual training at Ballykinlas camp. It is believed that Bailey took cramps in the water and Scott dived in to his assistance, with the result that both were drowned.
