A report from Castleres alleges that a silver mine has been discovered in a quarry at Boho. Recently, after a rock in the quarry, twenty feet under the surface of the land, had been opened by blasting, there appeared a large vein in the center of it which had the appearance of silver. The vein had been greatly shattered by the explosion, but Mr. Costello, the foreman, gathered up as much of the fragments as he could and forwarded them to a jeweler in Dublin for analysis. Mr. Costello has received a reply, stating that it is a most valuable mineral and to preserve as much of it as possible. In proceeding with the work of quarrying since, further discoveries have been made of material which has all the appearance of containing silver.
