FIGHTING AGAINST SLEEP

Difficulties Contended With While Crossing Gobi Desert.

Hitherto I have thought that traveling by carts over stony roads and staying in Chinese inns at night was the hardest thing a foreign traveler in China was called upon to endure, but since I have traveled with a caravan of camels I have changed my opinion, says a writer in the New China News. The monotony of the desert by day and the bed of camels' saddles at night, the evil smell of camels and the slowness of their drivers, and the acrid, choking smoke of the little fire on which one's food is cooked—none of these things is so trying to the foreigners as the sleepiness which attacks one in this high region. This to me was a real torture. Traveling through the cold night with no other company than dull Chinese who seem to sleep while walking alongside the camels or while sitting on their backs, and being weighed down by heavy sleepiness, is the worst thing I have endured.

You sit on your horse and, in spite of every effort, fall asleep. Presently you wake up and find yourself on the ground, with your horse standing bewildered at your side, wondering whether you are alive or dead. Then you try to keep yourself awake by walking and talking a bit to the camel drivers but you soon find that they are just as sleepy as yourself. A few words exchanged and then you are too tired to open your mouth to talk or even think of anything but sleep. You are there at the roadside in the soft sand. But no, you must go on and fight against this desire. It is too dangerous to sleep by the roadside on the ground. The caravan cannot wait and your servant would not watch over you, he would soon fall asleep like yourself. The wolves would then have an easy time.

Yet in spite of all this reasoning you feel as if you were drawn to the ground by the power of a thousand strong magnets, and soon yield to sleep again. Suddenly your watchful horse, whose reins you have kept slung around your neck, this is a wise thing to do, pulls up, starts, and jerks you wide awake. You jump up, not knowing where you are for some seconds, but you see your horse trembling and realize that danger is near.

For a few minutes you are fully awake and feel glad and refreshed. You jump on your horse and catch up with the caravan, which has gone a few miles (it is 654 yards) ahead.

After another ten or so sleep creeps on again like a huge boa constrictor embracing you in its irresistible grasp. The same fight has then to be fought over again. Then at last the caravan arrives at the halting place for the night.

Divining Rod Falls.

The divining rod expert who was sent by the German authorities to their colony in Southwest Africa has been unsuccessful in his attempts to find water. This expert made many discoveries of underground water supplies in Germany and the home Government accordingly determined to utilize his services in the colony where a chalk formation contained a bed of water, and wells would have been successful if driven anywhere. In other places his predictions that water would be found at depths of 50 feet to 215 feet proved entirely unsuccessful, as the borings were carried down much below the predicted depths of the water bearing stratum, but were entirely dry.

Limes on the Keys.

The great bulk of limes that are grown in Florida have been and are produced on the Florida keys. Since the settlement of the country around the south of Miami there has been more or less limes planted in the mainland, but for some reason dealers prefer those grown on the rocky lands of the keys.

A great portion of the lands on the keys where the lime is grown in large quantities is too rocky to be cultivated, says the Florida East Coast Home-seeker. Originally the land is covered with a dense growth of low oak underbrush, with here and there patches of larger trees.

The fruit grower in preparing his land for planting limes simply cuts down the rank undergrowth, and when dried sufficiently it is burned off and the limes are set in the "pot holes," many times regardless of rows. It is said that these trees grow rapidly and in three or four years commence bearing and continue to bear for many years.

Hard Coal in Furnaces.

At only two blast furnace plants in the United States is anthracite coal now used alone as fuel—Lock Ridge of the Thomas Iron Company in the Lehigh Valley, and the Allentown Rolling Mills furnaces at Allentown, Pa.

Railroads in China.

Chinese authorities have decided that all railroads built by Chinese shall revert to the Government 25 years after they are opened.

German Locomotives for France.

For the first time in their history the French railways have just given German locomotive makers an order. The locomotives now ordered are of an uncommonly heavy type.

The man who smiles when he has hard luck, won't have any.
