Passing for a Lady
 By W. FELT BRIDGE

"How do I look?" he demanded anxiously. "Coat collar all right? Necktie not rucked up at the back? Just give me another brush down, will you? My dear," in answer to her protest, "you'd be fidgety if you'd got all the responsibility I've got to take on my shoulders today."

Labeler Goble, off duty and prepared to conduct his young wife and the members of his society; the alarms and excursions of the season over, to a town on the seacoast for a day's trip, ran to and fro seeing to back doors and windows, and not knowing whether or not he was fastening those. His young wife, cool and self possessed, took opportunity to pin at the correct angle a hat which should presently make the seat of Railway Terrace miss a cart and chasten the joy of other day passengers at the station.

"And if I'm introduced to the general manager," Goble called up the stairs, "and, mind you, it's quite possible, why, if you're a very good girl, I may introduce you. And if I do, I must ask you, for goodness gracious sake, and for mine, be careful. If you can't catch what he says or you don't answer back 'What's he row?' as though you were talking to me. Say, 'Beg your pardon, sir'."

An excited platform, with bunches of folk waiting for the excursion and members of the uniformed staff shaking quite in the manner of unofficial people, contended in dealing for once with passengers who did not badger them with questions concerning the probability of finding room in the approaching train. No necessity to warn the excursionists to stand back as the train came, no need to restrain impetuous lady passengers from opening the door of the dog box.

Goble cried the head-guard, "Where's Goble?"
 "Here I am!"
 "General manager wants you to travel down with him. He's in the first-class saloon right at the back. Wants some information for his speech."

"You bundle in anywhere," said Labeler Goble to his wife hurriedly. "If you come with me you'll be going and making some mistake in your grammar."

At the seaside station a ring formed on the platform, made up of the railway men and the railway men's wives, all anxious to see the great man as he appeared when off duty.

"The wife, Goble?"
 "Yes, sir. If you don't mind, sir, I've been married this two year. I say two year, but that's a lie, a year and ten months is more like it."

Very pleased to make your acquaintance, Mrs. Goble, I think we are to be favored with, comparatively speaking, good weather, considering the period of the year. Trust we shall meet later."

Some of the older women argued that when the general manager lifted his white top hat Mrs. Goble wished to discuss her, and partly because of the wonderful hat, they left Mrs. Goble alone, and when the general manager came out with his following and sat down on the bench, the general manager sent a chief clerk across to Mrs. Goble, and signified his gracious desire to take her presently to lunch.

The general manager and his suite made a feint of leaving immediately after the lunch. Labeler Goble, rising, arrested them with a warning eye, and said there remained one more duty to perform before the distinguished officers of the company were allowed to depart. When he said duty he hoped they would understand that he did not mean duty—the word he ought to have used was "privilege." Labeler Goble emphasized non-existent points by jabbing a dessert knife into the tablecloth.

With his wife seated close by and steering, Goble reached his port without further disaster. The general manager, in reply, said he had been distressed to meet so many of the staff and their wives.

"I knew the speech all right," argued Goble in confidence, when they were on the crowded yacht for an hour's voyage. "I got every word in my mind as pat as could be. You're aware of that, my dear, because I said it over several times to you. But somehow—"

"You pulled through."

"Thanks to you. And there's something more. I had a friendly chat with G. M.'s secretary at the station just now, and he said if I ever applied for an inspectorship I was to send him a private note at the same time. And he told me the G. M. said you were one of the best-mannered women he had ever met. Now, what I'm anxious to know, my dear, is this; how in the world you managed to give him that impression? Because as a matter of fact, all I could overhear you saying now and again was, 'Oh, really!'"

"Any lady, so my sister told me last night when she lent me this hat," said Mrs. Goble, "any lady can pass muster for a lady if she only keeps her mouth very nearly shut."

BATS AS HOUSE PETS
 A Most Affectionate Creature, As Kindly As a Dog.

The detested bat makes a most agreeable household pet, according to a writer in the Technical World. He is a most affectionate creature and will attach himself to a person as does a kindly and intelligent dog. A college professor says:

"When I was a student at the university I had two bats, which came and went freely of their own accord. In the evening they were wont to roost through the window into the neighboring garden, hunt insects, and when their hunger was appeased they would return to my room.

"They slept on a bookshelf, where they suspended themselves from a dictionary. At the present time I possess a bat that shows a touching attachment to my person and follows me about through the rooms of my house if I call it."

The advocate of bats as pets further states that when he talks pleasantly of it his present favorite raises and covers its ears, much after the manner that indicates it is pleased and contented. When harshly spoken to it says back its ears, shrinks away and tries to escape by climbing up the curtain.

"When I sit by lamp-light in the morning working at my desk I can hardly get rid of it," he writes. "It comes and goes, rambling about the desk or climbing up my legs, or else it sits on the curtain and endeavors by violent shakings of the head and bill witterings to excite my attention and to obtain worms—its usual food—thereby. Its appetite is indeed voracious. Thirty fat worms are readily taken at one meal."

Proofs of His Innocence.

A curate up North, says rumor, has furnished another example of the usual apology at his own expense. Having preached a very clever sermon on the Sunday, he called upon a certain colonel on the Monday especially to ask his opinion.

"How did I like the sermon?" said the colonel. "Very much, indeed. It's one of my favorites."

"One of your favorites," stammered the curate, slightly puzzled. "I do not understand."

The colonel regarded him with a twinkle at the back of his eye.

"Of course, I won't say a word," he said, "but I know very well that you stole it, and also where you stole it from."

"Sir," said the curate, and he spoke from out the whirlwind of his righteous indignation. "I am not in the habit, sir, of stealing my sermons. I fear you are laboring under a mistake, and—forgetting yourself, sir, I must ask you to apologize."

The colonel was silent a moment. Then he said—

"It may be that I have made a mistake. Wait a moment. I will make sure."

Going to his bookcase, he took down a massive tome of sermons—a rare and almost forgotten work. He turned to a certain page, and an apologetic, humble look came into his face as he glanced up at the curate.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "I apologize. You did not steal it, after all. I find it is still here. My mistake, sir; my mistake!"

Make the Garden to Fit the House.

There should always be just proportion between the house and its decorated grounds, says Anna Lea Merritt in March "New" Lippincott. A cottage may stand knee-deep in flowers, but a stately mansion should hold its head high, associate with wide lawns and geometrical flower-beds, vigorous in color, on a terrace perhaps, between groups of noble trees, keeping its true flower-garden in a walled pleasure-approach by walks alluringly picturesque.

The lawn and walks are to the mansion as a pedestal to a statue and should be considered by the architect, who designs also the elevation of roots and chimneys to harmonize with surrounding landscape. When these "ornamental walks have led beyond the expanse of level lawn, they may turn and wander through shrubbery or fruit-trees until the flower-garden is reached. Every step of the way should be considered.

A very good way to secure harmonious color in quite a small garden, such as the usually square enclosure behind a villa, is to fill one side with plants of only yellow and white; so that all summer, successfully, white and yellow or orange flowers will continue. The next side, if fit for roses, carnations, and tulips, may be a constant bloom of rose and crimson. The third side plant with shades of purple and blue. This arrangement will secure constant harmony. It can be done in this way. I am supposing the garden to have walls.

Scraping Along on $50,000.

We have heard it laid down by a thoughtful man, and a Scotchman to boot, that the most impossible of all positions is that of a man who has a wife and a large family and a thousand pounds a year to keep up an appearance on. Why not, for variation's sake, discuss the question as to what a man can manage to cut anything of a figure on? It was laid down by a former member for Sheffield that it was absolutely impossible to make any real show in public life with an income under ten thousand ($50,000) a year.

A GOOD TIME FOR JENKINS

Before Harrowcome met a girl, who was the most wonderful creature the world had ever seen, and married her, thus retiring into oblivion so far as most of his friends were concerned, he and Jenkins had been bosom friends.

Matrimony having whittled Harrowcome off to the suburbs, he and Jenkins had seen little of each other in the three years which followed.

Jenkins had paid his wedding call and had been asked out to dinner, but suburban time tables finally got in their deadly work, so it had been many moons since he and the Harrowcomes had met in a social way.

Rushing into the bank just before closing time the other day, Jenkins ran full tilt into Harrowcome.

"Why didn't you ever come round and see us?" demanded the latter. "Can't you come tomorrow night? We'll have a regular good old time. Grace has a pretty girl visiting, and we'll play whist. And you have never seen my boy."

"I'll come," said the innocent Jenkins, lured by the whist and the pretty girl. If there is anything he likes it is a good game of cards with congenial friends and a decent cigar to follow.

Miss Barrett did not believe the reputation given her. She was more than pretty—she was charming. Jenkins knew it the minute he laid eyes on her. And he was to face her across the card table all the evening, besides talking to her at dinner!

It was after the cigars were finished that the first cloud appeared.

"Now for the boy," Harrowcome said, beaming. "I've got a treat for you, Jenk, old man. You're to be allowed to come up to the nursery and see him put to bed. He's the greatest fun."

"Oh! certainly," said Jenkins, politely.

Miss Barrett smiled sweetly and said she would read till their return, as the nursery was small and would not hold a crowd. Jenkins reflected that the ordeal would soon be over. He surveyed the infant with the nervous air of an amateur.

"What's your name?" he asked, his face contorted by what he felt to be a smile.

"Oh! pshaw," broke in Harrowcome, indignantly. "Don't you know anything at all? You'll be offering him a cigar next."

Harrowcome junior objected to the sleep producing process and howled lustily.

"Aren't his lungs great?" asked the proud father.

"They seem all wool and a yard wide," said Jenkins, with feeble mirth. He was thinking about Miss Barrett in the library below.

"And muscle!" began Harrowcome. "Sometimes he kicks when he gets cross—maybe he will tonight. Do you think he will, Grace?"

"Will there be room?" asked Jenkins anxiously, with the hope that he might escape downstairs, where the attraction was.

"You needn't get nervous," said Harrowcome. "I want to tell you what he did the other day. If he isn't the smartest kid in the world, tell me!"

The story lasted fifteen minutes, but Harrowcome junior was finally jucked into bed, and Jenkins arose with alacrity.

"You go down, Grace," said Harrowcome senior. "Jenk and I'll stay here till the boy is asleep. He always wants his father to sit with him till he goes to bed," explained Harrowcome fatuously, to his now hopeless friend.

It was half an hour before the little tyrant sunk into slumber. His father put in the time rehearsing his feats. Jenkins's one timid inquiry as to Miss Barrett's home and the length of her visit at the house was totally unheard.

At last they went downstairs and he lead went of Jenkins's mind. Miss Barrett was still as beautiful as ever and not a whit less charming than when he had been torn away from her.

For twenty minutes there was peace and happiness. Jenkins decided that her eyelashes were longer than any he had previously seen, when there was a wall from upstairs.

The card game was stopped. Mrs. Harrowcome went up to investigate the trouble but Jenkins did not mind that, because he could look at Miss Barrett with undivided attention and deep admiration.

For about one minute—then the noxious called Miss Barrett up to the nursery.

In undisguised gloom Jenkins sulked and listened to his host's recital of more juvenile brilliancies for an interminable time till the two women returned. Then Jenkins rose.

"You're not going!" they cried. "It's time for my last train," said Jenkins quite coldly. "No, I'm sorry, but I can't wait any later. I've had a delightful evening, I assure you. Oh! yes, thank you, I'll call again."

The only thing which saved him from bitterly concluding the Harrowcomes had wrecked the romance of his life was the later discovery that Miss Barrett lives only six doors from his own home. So he has forgiven them.—Illustrated Side.

The American Family Support the Fletcher Method of Teaching.

If any member of the American Family Appleton family invites you to a social, don't forget the Fletcher Method of Teaching. The Appletons are teaching their children in order not to make any mistake they count on their fingers. This is a sample of the conversation heard at the Appleton table: "Have you heard," said Mrs. Appleton, putting a piece of bread in her mouth, "that one, two, three, four, five, six" (counting her breath)—"a widow on North Fourth street—seven, eight, nine, ten—is to be married!" She swallowed the bread and takes a bite of meat. "I guess it is only one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two,
