who seek to destroy, or who are the enemies of that which he wishes to study. Not one Protestant in thousands ever seeks information concerning the Catholic Church from Catholic sources...

Liberty. The Catholic Journal has before referred to the fulminations of "Liberty" the national organ of the Seventh Day adventists. This sheet keeps hammering away at former President Roosevelt's declaration that there is no reason why a Catholic should not be President of the United States...

Noted Authors. In the death of Marion Crawford and Charles Warren Stoddard, Catholic literature loses two shining lights. Mr. Crawford's facile pen has appealed to the literary minds of all classes.

"Liberty" goes on to say: "The real meaning of this explanation of the Roman Catholic attitude should not escape attention. The church advocates 'the union of church and state where ideal conditions prevail...' or in other words where Roman Catholics are in the majority, and the reason she has never advocated the union of church and state in America is because she does not have the power to bring about a union between the Roman Church and the state and she does not wish to see a union between the Protestant church and the state."

This is decidedly unfair in that it tries to convey the impression that the Catholic church is the foe of liberty. This is decidedly far from the truth. The church has ever stood for human liberty. Ask the Jews, ask the down-trodden in every stage and clime. Ask the Protestants in Quebec where the Catholic church is the state religion.

"But what is the use of going further: 'Liberty' only wants liberty to its own votaries, slavery to all others."

Splendid! It is gratifying to see the interest taken in the Catholic position by those who are not of us or with us. In a recent letter published in the Toronto, Ont., "Catholic Register", Rev. J. B. Hemmeon, a Methodist minister, makes this stirring appeal.

"When a person of common sense wishes to obtain information about anything, whether political, religious, scientific, or it matters not what it may be, he goes to headquarters for authentic information—never to those

Those non-Catholics who attended that Holy Name banquet of the Immaculate Conception parish cannot realize yet what it means.

Catholic activity is very much in evidence in Rochester these days.
