church, for it realizes the necessity of making provision for those dependent on its members, and this end is a right one."

The Bishop sought to impress upon the delegates a sense of their obligation to maintain the society on a proper financial basis. The extraordinary is usually open to question, he said, and certain causes produce certain effects in business as elsewhere. He admonished all of the members of the organization to remember their obligations as Catholics men, and said: "There is no force in the world that can give to any government or any country a better asset than to give a good and practical Catholic to that community."

Grand Committeeman, Chas. M. Bayer After the service in the Cathedral the delegates proceeded in a body to Cathedral Hall. Here Mayor E. H. Edgerton extended the city's welcome. A few minutes before the arrival of the Mayor, Bishop Hickey, accompanied by Rev. J. F. O'Hara, Rev. J. J. Barrett, Rev. Francis Kuns and Rev. J. H. Day, reached the hall. Mayor Edgerton was accompanied by Secretary Charles Ogden. The convention rose to receive the visitors and then all of the delegates knelt while the Bishop offered the opening prayer. Grand President McAvoy introduced Mayor Edgerton.

John J. Hynes, of Buffalo, president of the Supreme Council, resigned to the Mayor.

The feature of the opening day was the public parade through the streets of the city Tuesday evening. Several thousand men were in line, many of them uniformed, and some of them mounted. They made an impressive appearance and were greeted by crowds of people who lined the sidewalks.

Following the parade was a meeting in Convention Hall that crowded every inch of the large auditorium to overflowing. A class of about 600 was initiated with the grand officers in charge. Vicar-General D. J. Curran and the supreme and grand officers made addresses.

The officers elected were: President, Hon. Thomas B. McAvoy of New York City; first vice president, Daniel Sheehan, Mayor of Elmira; second vice president, Virgil J. Essel of Utica; treasurer, John Schwartz of Buffalo; secretary, Edward Ryan of Syracuse; marshal, Capt. John Cooney of New York; guard, James J. Kennedy of Albion; trustees, Charles P. ROCHESTER SAVING BANK

A Bit of History

Next year the centennial of savings banks will be celebrated. The first plan for a savings bank system was formulated by Samuel Whitbread, in 1807, but Henry Duncan, in 1810, established the Rochdale Savings Bank in Dumfriesshire, Scotland. The first year's deposits were 150 pounds.

The Rochester Savings Bank was incorporated 21 years later, and in 78 years its growth has kept pace with the growth of Rochester. Its history is a record of helpfulness to the wage-earner and the small saver. It is ready to help you buy or build a home.
