Temple Theatre Opening.

Monday night, December 6, J. H. Moore will throw open the doors of his new vaudeville palace, the Temple Theatre, to the public. The sale of seats for the opening week will begin at the box office of the new theater next Thursday morning at 9 o'clock.

The management announces positively no favoritism will be shown. Those who are first in line will have first choice of seats, and all seats will be placed on sale, with the exception of the seats reserved for the season, which will be held according to rule.

The prices are practically the same as maintained by Mr. Moore at the Cook Opera House, with the exception that box seats at matinee performances will be 50 cents instead of 35 cents. In the evening prices down stairs are 50 cents and 25 cents, and in the balcony 30 cents and 25 cents, with the gallery 15 cents. Box seats are as heretofore 75 cents.

There will be matinees every day at 25 cents for the best seats in the theater, and 20 cents for seats in the balcony circle, the gallery remaining as heretofore at 10 cents.

The opening week at the Temple will indicate the quality of entertainment that will prevail throughout the season. Every effort will be made by the management toward the comfort and wholesome entertainment of women and children at matinees.

This week is the last week of J. H. Moore vaudeville at the Cook Opera House, and next Saturday night will end its long reign of this popular form of theatrical entertainment. One week from to-morrow night will bring the opening of J. H. Moore's new vaudeville palace, the Temple Theatre, declared to be the second largest handsomest and safest vaudeville theater on the American continent.

Heading the bill is the well known star of light opera, Nella Bergon. Nella Bergon will present a brilliant character song study.

The special feature attraction is Eleanor Gordon, who will appear with her company in a comedietta by Edgar Allen Wolf entitled "Tips on Taps." In her support are Joseph Sullivan, George Pierlot and Blanche Gordon.

"The Lawlors," Mabel, Charles B. and Alice, a character singing study called "A Night and Day on the Side walks of New York."

Phil Statts, "300 pounds of monologue and planologue," Mosher Hayes and Mosher, in a comedy bicycle act; the Quigley brothers, in their Irish conversation, and the Gartelle brothers in comedy roller skating, will also be found on the bill, together with the Mooreoscope pictures.

Baker Theater.

For his next attraction commencing with the matinee on Monday, November 29th, and continuing for the week, Mr. Lytell and his company will be seen in "Our New Minister," which, while new to Rochester, has been one of the most successful now on the road. It is a rural drama something on the order of "Way Down East" and was written by that master hand at rural drama, the Denman Thompson, the author of "The Old Homestead," a classic of its kind. The play is full of heart interest and pure fun, and will no doubt be found one of the most entertaining of the plays offered thus far by Mr. Lytell and his company. The usual matinees will be played on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday.
