Auburn Savings Bank.

There are no safer or more useful financial institutions in the State of New York than the savings banks, and the Auburn Savings Bank is as sound and safe as any of them. The toilers need not hesitate to deposit in it their surplus wages. It has the best possible location at the corner of Genesee and South Streets, one of the principal four corners in the city. It owns the large block there and has about half a million dollars of surplus. The bank was established in 1849, has been uniformly successful and satisfactory to the people, and its further strong recommendation is found in the following officers: David M. Dunning, president; Nelson B. Eldred, first vice president; George Underwood, second vice president and attorney; William G. Downer, treasurer and secretary; Adolph Keil, assistant treasurer.

Eagle Wagon Works.

The Auburn factory with this name was incorporated in 1905, and makes so many dump wagons and boxes to meet the demand for them that it keeps 70 mechanics busy, and uses 70,000 square feet of space in a brick building 165 feet long and 85 feet wide. The company is officered by Frank L. Dorr, president; Thomas M. Osborne, vice president; C. F. Baldwin, treasurer, and C. G. Avery, secretary. Its satisfactory prosperity is indicated by the number of its employees. The wide wagons which it turns out are as necessary as the luxurious carriages of the wealthy.
