

FATHER KENNEDY'S NERVE TONIC

Struck the Right Medicine.

Three years ago my daughter was taken with severe disease so bad that she could not walk without falling down and could hardly meet her weight on the table, was at times very nervous and could not sleep at night. We despaired for several years that we could never recover her. It was a wonderful effect on her and she is now as well as ever.

Russian Suit For Small Boy—Flowers Lavender Than Ever.

A neat little model in a Russian suit for a small boy is made of linen. The blouse is in plastron effect from about neck to hem and is trimmed down both edges with white pearl buttons. The blouse closes down the left front under a fly. There is a loose belt of the material. The collar is a straight band. The sleeves are full and plaited.

French flowers are lovely enough this season to tempt the most rigid economist to indulge in their purchase. Éclair la France roses are conspicuously beautiful and realistic. Equally attractive are the Malmaison roses with delicate spiky foliage, on which the natural bloom seems actually reproduced.

This little frock is charming for girls in their teens. The blouse is made without lining and consequently means

MODISTIC MATTERS.

Titian Frocks of Black Satin the Latest For Small Folk.

The little folk with their long coats and dresses of black satin with black lace collars look like reproductions of Titian's canvases. Indoors they wear with such costume sashes of rose or other bright color and hair bows of the same.

The advance modes for summer crowns show the trunk as being very popular. For instance, anything from a twelve and a half cent gingham to a little labor. It includes the plaits over the shoulders that conceal the armholes. The skirt is made with plaited side portions that are joined to a yoke, while it is full length at front and back.

DOINGS OF FASHIONDOM.

The New Fad in Handkerchiefs—Return of the Short Sleeve.

One can find the bargains in extremely pretty handkerchiefs included in the white sales at all department stores. A new fancy is for the all over embroidered design. These come in plaids and checks in all white and white embroidered in colors.

The return of the short sleeve just now is one of the surprises of the mode, but that it is well established is guaranteed by its prevalence in both dressy gowns and coats. There is the seven-eighths length, near the lower wrist; three-quarters, halfway between wrist and elbow, and half length, at the elbow and even above that point. Many of the linen coats of an elaborate nature have three-quarters or seven-eighths sleeves.

The lingerie blouse that is made with a square yoke is one of the latest blue ground of exceptionally lovely tone, with a rippling moiré pattern running over the surface.

The new linen frocks are very pretty. This one shows lines of green on a background of natural color and is trimmed with green, with a chemise of white embroidery. The lines of the dress are all simple yet very effective. For something a little more elaborate the trimming could be of a contrasting color.

SAILOR BLOUSE OR SHIRT WAIST.

found silk of good quality may be made in this favorite tunic or apron fashion.

A young woman with some bits of rich old gold brocade, the remains of an ancient waistcoat, has had the silk made into a pair of high breasted slippers to go with a black mousseline dinner gown. Pieces of old time brocade, if any remain, are no longer lay lashed on pincushions, but are being made into shoes and slippers.

The sailor blouse is such a satisfactory garment that it is always in demand. This one includes the plaits at the shoulders that are so popular in the spring. It can be worn with or without the shield, and the shield can be cut either high or low.

VOGUE POINTS.

Colored Blouses Are Going to Be Smart the Coming Summer.

Those who are making lingerie blouses should pay attention to the colored ones that match the coat suit in coloring, but are made of wash material. They are severely simple, consisting of the usual side tucks with a full down the front. The sleeves are moderately close fitting and have a three inch turnback cuff. The fabrics used are dotted Swiss, voile, nain, marquisette and grenadine.

A smart suit of heavy linen crease has a gored skirt and hip length coat. The coat has a collarless neck, embroidered in self color and closing with two large buttons worked like the neck and fastened through large loops on the edge of the front.

New gorges for old petticoats, or, for that matter, for new ones, too, are to be had ready to sew on in several styles and materials. The gorges are shirred, plaited or of plain circular shape. The gorges have drawstrings that adjust them to the width of the skirt.

This nine gored skirt is one of the latest designs of the spring walking skirt. It is also an excellent pattern for white and colored separate skirts for summer wear. It can be either laid in inverted plaits in the back or finished in habit style.

MOODS OF THE MODE.

A New Button For Outdoor Wraps—Belt of Chamolite Leather.

There is a new button for outdoor garments made of wood. It is imbedded and polished in beautiful colors and harmonious designs.

On some of the extra large turbans there has come about a fashion of using a border of small feathers. These are substituted for fur and are an advance style of the spring turbans. A four inch band of tiny white tips is used on a black panne velvet turban, with a turquoise and crystal cabochon at left front. The reverse of this style is a narrow band of black tips used on a white beaver.

The belts of chamolite, dyed to match the costume of cloth or velvet, are the choice just now of the smart girl. A

HOW TO SELECT FISH.

In purchasing fish, says Markon Harlow, president of the Philadelphia school of cookery, freshness is the primary desideratum. The chief points to notice are fullness of the eye, firmness of the gills and brilliancy of the skin. Fish if in good condition will keep firm under pressure of the finger, and the smell, though slight, is not unpleasant, but this cannot be depended on, as the sense of smell varies in keenness on that point. In purchasing cod the freshness may be known by the bulging hinge of the fish and the slightly iridescent line of the jaw. If the fish be yellow do not buy it. Flat fish should be selected by their thickness. Fresh smelts have an odor of newly cut cucumber, which they lose within twelve hours after being cut. Fresh salmon has between the flakes a creamy white curd, which solidifies in twenty-four hours. It should be well covered with very bright scales, and the flesh would be of a bright red color. Halibut is a wholesome fish. It should be of middling size, thick and of a creamy white color. In choosing lobsters take the tail and pull it away from the body. If it is elastic and springs back, the lobster is fresh; if not, it is stale. Lobsters and crabs are tested by weight, those of medium size having the highest flavor. The varieties of fish available for food in this country are numerous and excellent; those containing the least fat are the most easily digested. The flesh of fish contains fibrin, gelatin and albumen in small proportions. Mineral matter and water is also present.

All fish out of season are unwholesome and sometimes positively injurious. It is said that fish are fully as nutritious as animal food, and, though they may not have such a satisfying effect upon the stomach, that arises from their being so easily digested. The following are two fish recipes which Miss Nell recommends:

Camorote of Fish.

Put half a pound of cooked white fish and add a slice of bread which has been soaked in a little milk. Heat well together and put through a chaffing machine, then through a sieve barbaric ornament of dull silver set with enamel or colored stones is the buckle most worn.

The Russian blouse coat is one of the smartest models of the spring, and many of the summer linen suits are being made up with these coats. The coat consists of blouse and petting that are joined beneath the belt and the closing made at the left side. The sleeves may be plain or puffed.
