The remainder of the bill appears to be all that the most captious of vaudeville lovers could desire. Among the acts might be mentioned Howard & North, in their original sketch "Those Were the Happy Days," Charley Case, the man who talks about his father, the Five Artois, first time here, in a colorful instrumental and vocal act called "A Night in Naples," O'Brien, Havel & Co. in "Ticks and Clicks," the Three Ernests, in a fast comedy bar act, Frank Wilson, the spinning cyclist, Cotto & Boulden, in a singing and dancing act, and the Telescope Lectures.

Cook's. Playgoers who delight in crisp characterization in plays are once more to have an opportunity to satisfy their desire, when "Checkers," by H. M. Blossom, Jr., comes to the Cook Opera House the first half of next week.

This popular play has been called America's greatest character play. Whether that be an exaggeration, there is no doubt but that varied characters abound in it. It may be said that the parts of Checkers, Port Arthur and Sadie are characters. But they are most strictly classed as straight parts. Most conspicuous of the character parts is "Push" Miller, the race track tout. It is played by Dave Braham, Jr., son of the late Dave Braham.

The Patient Mate.

"The kind-hearted woman was very attentive about a certain male belonging to Erastus Pinkley. The male had a sad and heavy appearance, an ever looked more dejected than when his proprietor brought it up with a flourish at the front gate, says a writer in the Washington Star.
