"Pa." said Mrs. Mathemay. "I think Heward Crook and liftle would make a panel match."

"If you wish them to make don't het them know it. Nothing knorp young people spart like trying to bring them beguther."

"[Fre no hope of their metting to gether. They're both so binship! they don't dare look'at each other." "Let 'am alone, and if they have a natural attraction for each other they will make it up in time. Better still. tell them that ask on any account shall they fall in love, that there is a special reason why they must not marry."

"Nonsence! They're too bushful to get sogether anyways. I don't care to put anything she between 'em to beep

'em apart."

But Mrs. Hathaway noticed that the young people needed some spice to move them toward each other, and she concluded to try her husband's plan. She called her daughter to her one day and told her that she was not to take any interest in Heward, since or, no account tould she marry him. She would have said the same to Howard, but it is not a very pleasant thing to tell a young man that he must not think of marrying one's daughter, especially when that young man har shown no possillection for her. When Mrs. Hatheway had given her. When the differention are told her her band and what she had slove. At the time he was sharing, move them toward each other, and she he was sharing.

"Pa." she said, "I've warned hike."

"About what?"
"Not to fall in love with Moward."
"How did she take it?"
"The acted kind of runny."
"What do you make by theat?"

"That would indicate that she has already cast covidence syst mpon him.
