

FATHER KOENIG'S NERVE TONIC

No more spells.
From Yalesville, Conn., writes Mr. J. F. McGovern, Sept. 8, 1910, that his daughter, 14 years old, was so nervous she could not attend school. The doctor treated her over 3 months, but without success. Then he used Father Koenig's Nerve Tonic and two bottles had the desired effect.

Mr. Chas. Wittman, 1 Chatham Square, New York, was sick from heart disease, fever and fainting. Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic benefited his case very much and he is very well satisfied with the results.

Mrs. A. Thomas, Winfield, N. Y., was troubled with dizziness and weakness for three months. A few doses of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic relieved her and after taking one bottle she had no more attacks.

FOR STREET WEAR.

Coat and Skirt Gowns on Novel Lines.

SPRING TAILORED GOWN

If you contemplate ordering a new street dress consider well the features of the new tailored frocks that are being shown by those who cater to advanced taste in fashion. Notice the shortness of the coats, many of which are sloped from the front after the manner of a cutaway coat. Large buttons—two or three, perhaps five—will keep the front of the coat closed, while collars are more ample than ever. The illustration shows a typical tailored gown of white cloth finished with bands of silk braid.

For the Children

Father Penguin, Who Lives in London's Zoo.

Not long ago a pair of penguins at the London zoo became the parents of a baby penguin. Penguins are seldom seen in captivity, so the advent of the baby was a matter of great interest to naturalists and the public generally. The penguin's home is in the southern hemisphere, and they live amid the ice. The wings have only rudimentary quills and are used as paddles. The young are born covered with down, but are very helpless and require to be tended for a long period in the nest. The food of penguins consists exclusively of fish, which the birds capture beneath the surface by their agility in swimming and diving, when their paddle-like wings serve them to good purpose. So thoroughly at home are they in the water that they at first glance are often mistaken for dolphins or porpoises.

Sequels to "Mother Goose."

A rhyming game with plenty of chances for fun in it is here described. Before your guests arrive take as many sheets of paper as there are to be guests. At the top of each sheet write the last stanza of a nursery rhyme, a different one on each paper—for example:

When she got there
The cupboard was bare,
And so the poor dog had none.

You will probably need a copy of "Mother Goose" to refer to. When the guests have arrived a pencil and one of the papers with a verse at the top are given to each, and they are told that the point of the game is to write a sequel to the nursery rhyme each will find on his paper, the time allotted being half an hour. When time is up the papers are collected and the verses read aloud. A prize for the best rhyme may be given by a committee or awarded, chosen from among the players. Here is an example:

The dog was distressed,
Had a pain in his chest
Because of his hunger and thirst.
He howled out his woe,
Then turned up his toes,
Disappointment his poor heart had burst.

Remarkable Fish.

The curiously named trigger fish are plentiful in Japanese waters. They are of the bilistae genus, and their popular name is derived from the trigger-like peculiarity of the second spine of the dorsal fin. When the fin is erected the first ray, or spine, which is very thick and strong, maintains its elevated position so firmly that it cannot be pressed down by any degree of force, but if the second spine is pressed the first immediately falls down with a spring, like the hammer of a gunlock when the trigger is pulled. These fish are marked in a striking manner, some of them being very richly colored—ashen gray, blue and gold.

A Boy's Queer Tumble.

Lloyd Skinner climbed up the stone face of the dam at Electric lake, in New Jersey, and when he had reached the top he fell down to the bottom. This is a bad habit that some boys can never break themselves of. Lloyd did more than fall. As he passed a jagged rock his coat caught, and it was taken off his back as neatly as if somebody had tried to hold him up by the ends of the sleeves. By the time he reached the end of his fall he had lost a shoe as well. In return for these losses he received a large black and blue bruise on his back, but otherwise his thirty foot tumble did not do him much harm.

A Water Trick.

Put your napkin into the form of a cravat and request some one of the company to fill up your glass with water and place it on your napkin; cover your glass with a hollow plate; cover again the plate with the two ends of the napkin in such a fashion that the glass will be tightly pressed against the plate, and turn the whole upside down. It is now easy to drink the liquid, which comes down gently into the plate, and hence you can readily waver to drink a glass of water without touching your glass with your hands or mouth.

Cradle Song.

Rush thee, baby, night is near;
O'er bright star is shining clear;
Now the moon, a silver bow,
Hangs above our cottages low.
Rush thee, baby, close thine eyes;
Darker grow the evening skies.

Rush thee, baby, mother knows
Way to land of sweet repose.
She will guide thee safely there
O'er poppy blossoms fair.
Rush thee, baby, sleep and dream
While the stars above thee gleam.

Rush thee, baby, wonderful sight
As they cluster 'neath and 'round.
Wend thou that they never sleep,
For they never do.
Rush, oh, rush, the whole night long
Rush, oh, rush, the whole night long
Rush, oh, rush, the whole night long
Rush, oh, rush, the whole night long.

THE MANY GARDEN AS NATIONAL.

Artistic Stage Women Make Barbaric Costumes the Fashion.
Two clever women of the stage, Miss Mary Garden, the prima donna, and Miss Ethel Wynne Mathison, the actress who appears in "The Arrow Maker," have succeeded in so adapting the inharmonious of the redskin costume that they appeal to the eye of the paleface. In both these plays the picturesque possibilities of Indian life are made the most of. Not only are the costumes singularly pleasing and graceful, but the stage fittings are so artistic as to insure Indian decorations becoming a fact. Indian baskets, robes, Indian pottery, tomahawks, quivers, bunches of arrows, headwork, feather headresses, all may be made to play a part in designing an Indian decoration.

A well known literary woman whose husband's business takes him frequently through the west and into the reservation country, has had her hair fixed up with the various Indian souvenirs which he has gathered. Recently she gave an Indian luncheon in which a miniature tape made of bark was set on a bank of moss in the center of the table. Over it plates were trailed, and the edge was set off with a rather satisfactory amount of low growing ferns. The place cards and accessories carried out the Indian idea.
