Woman's World
 Some of Queen Mary's Social Moves Suggest She Lacks Taste.

DUCHESS OF HAMILTON.
 A good many people are wondering whether Queen Mary is going to merit the sobriquet of Mary the Tasteless. Since she came to the throne and realized that her pet aversions, the American dollar princesses, were quite capable of taking offense and packing off with their money to some more hospitable capitals, court circles have made every effort to contradict the persistent rumor that the queen is anti-American. The belief, however, has by no means been shaken by the appointments made in the readjustment of the court and the distribution of social prizes in the shape of coronation appointments.
 For instance, Queen Alexandra had as one of her coronation canopy bearers the young and charming Duchess of Marlborough, formerly Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt of New York. Even the duke's relations uphold her in her differences with her husband. The charities of the duchess are such as should commend her to a queen appreciative of good works, yet Queen Mary seemingly put a slight on Americanism by omitting the Marlborough name from the list of her four canopy bearers and reappointing the three other duchesses who had officiated at Queen Alexandra's coronation. It places the Duchess of Marlborough the queen named the Duchess of Hamilton, a selection that has caused English society to gasp with surprise, for one of the other canopy bearers is also the Duchess of Montrose, and the ancient feud of Hamiltons and Montroses has been revived. It came about in this way: The late Duke of Hamilton had only one child, a daughter, Lady Mary Douglas-Hamilton, to whom he was devoted. The heir to the title, the present duke, was a distant kinsman. It was possible for the duke to alienate much of the Hamilton wealth from the estate, and when he died he willed everything he could to his daughter.
 One of the Hamiltons' richest possessions was the island of Arran, where they reigned as sovereigns. Houses and lands, securities, art treasures, everything not entailed was willed to Lady Mary by her father, so that when the present, the thirteenth, duke moved into Hamilton palace its walls were almost bare. The duke was unable to appear in society or even keep up appearances until he married Miss Nina Poore, an English heiress.
 Neither the duke nor the duchess have ever forgiven this alienation of the estate, and when Lady Mary Hamilton married the Marquis of Graham, heir of the Duke of Montrose, the ancient feud seemed to be about to be revived. English society is large, and hitherto the two proud Scottish duchesses have been able to move like stars, each in her separate orbit, but their joint appointment as canopy bearers to the queen is drawing them together and in a manner that cannot fail to provoke questions of precedence, in which neither is likely to yield.
 The Hamiltons are the direct descendants of the Douglas famous in the days of Bruce, while the Montroses descend from that Montrose who fell a victim to the treachery of the "false Argyll." The Argyll of today happens to be the queen's uncle-in-law, husband of the king's aunt, Princess Louise. The house of Hamilton holds itself in no way inferior to royalty, having often intermarried with it and being direct descendants of the house of Stuart.

Gay Foulards and Brocades.
 Everything indicates the pre-eminence of foulards this season, the best having diminutive designs, which are printed with startling clearness—that is, there are no blurs. A spot, however tiny, is fully revealed. A square spot is noticeably effective, and there are stripes galore, from the closely and evenly placed pin line to the most bizarre combinations.

At present the disposition is to tempt the rich brocades by veillings. This is a beautiful ivory and old gold brocade had half its glories concealed beneath a tunic of purple nines. A tunic, however, that was split right up to the waist either side and was further embellished by a gorgeous brocade of bangles and neck jewels. These rich stunts if predicted, will in the near future be accepted unless any veillings

Good Form

The Luncheon Table.
 Crystal combined with silver makes beautiful and artistic decorations for the luncheon and dinner table.
 Compotes and dishes for appetizers and salads, nuts, olives, etc., are larger than these formerly in use and are almost flat.
 A useful stand for the center of the table consists of a silver vase with branching arms bearing five flat porcelain dishes. Another design has a large basket in the center for flowers, and the arms hold small baskets filled with bouquets. The porcelain dishes or baskets are detachable and can be lifted out and passed around.
 Carved rock crystal is used in place of the old-fashioned cut glass, unless one has a large supply of cut glass and does not wish to lay in a supply of glass, even if the style is newer.
 In China the most popular style at the moment has a very narrow line of color with a dull gold band at the edge.
 Gold and white, however, is always in good taste.

Naming the Day.
 It is the bride's privilege to name the wedding day. When this has been arranged a list is made of the close friends and valued acquaintances of both families so that nobody will be slighted by not getting an invitation. It is a good idea to use the letters of the alphabet for getting down these names, searching the memory as each letter presents itself for the name that begins with it. The invitations should be issued at least a month before the wedding. The arrangement of the church and the choice of the music that is to be played are entirely matters for the bride to decide. The bridegroom confers with the clergyman after the parents or guardians of the girl have seen him, going to all points for last directions the day before the ceremony.

Duties of a Godfather.
 The duties of a godfather consist in standing up with the child (though not actually holding him) at the time of the christening, and in some churches the godfather promises to see after the religious education of the child. It would be well for any one who has been asked to serve in this capacity to familiarize himself with the ritual of the church in which the child is to be christened in order to be able to make the proper responses at the right time.

Presentations.
 Always introduce a gentleman to a lady, an unmarried woman to a married one, a young girl to an older woman, a person of less social importance to a person of greater importance.
 When any one is introduced to you you may shake hands or not, just as you like. If the introduction is made in a very friendly way or if you have better shake hands. If you do not do this you should bow, smile and make some remark. If you afterward meet in the street or at another house a person who has been introduced to you, you may bow or not, just as you please. If you do not bow he will take it as a sign that you do not care to continue your acquaintance with him.

When Moving.
 When you are moving to another neighborhood you should send around to all your friends cards bearing the letters "P. P. O." and your new address. The letters are the beginning of three French words signifying "to take leave." These cards are often passed by post, but it is perhaps still more polite to leave them by hand. When you are settled in your new house you will probably give some thing in the nature of a "house warming," but even if you do not do this each "P. P. O." card carries to the friend who receives it an invitation to call upon you when she happens to be in your neighborhood.

Dating a Letter.
 In writing a letter the date and address are usually put at the beginning; in a note they are usually at the end. It is now the fashion to write out the numbers of the date. It would look affected, however, to write out that of the year, and many people adhere to the older fashion of using numerals. With regard to writing a letter on the first and last pages and then crossing on the second and third, this is entirely optional with the writer.

The Wedding Breakfast.
 The usual wedding breakfast consists of fruit, raw oysters, fish or lobster in some fancy form, an entire squab or broiled chicken, salad, hot cakes, waffles and coffee. Some times is expected, as the health of the married pair must be drunk, so the either champagne or sherry, and before spread may be of a very unpretentious sort. Various sandwiches, cold meats and punch are the things ordered.

EMBROIDERED GOWN
 Attractive Needlework on the Season's Frocks and Blouses

The fashion makers have decided that it should be hand needlework in dress (valuable feature of the season's wardrobe). Embroidered dresses are covered with embroidery, some of them in white and some in colors. The going is coming in again, and in some styles, hand-made lace, such as crocheted, are considered much more than anything else. An embroidery dress is of more value if made by hand. Naturally all the money is spent on the dress and the embroidery is done by hand. Play some of the old styles, which are of great value. Play some of the old styles, which are of great value.
