Historical Places. We are glad to notice that, all over the country, the Knights of Columbus are taking interest in the places made sacred by the lives and labors of the early Catholic explorers and missionaries.

The Election. In a few days, we will be called upon to elect city officers also county officers and members of assembly. It is the duty of each citizen to acquaint himself with the record and qualifications of each candidate who presents himself for the suffrages of his fellow electors.

Remember, October is the month devoted to the Holy Rosary and say the beads, if any-that he will vote in accordance with the dictates of this party it is well to look up what each party has promised and then to vote for the candidate who represents the party whose pledges conform more nearly to the standard which the individual voter would have prevailed.

In voting, one should follow the dictates of his own reason rather than place too much reliance upon the wisdom of another or follow the pleadings of a friend to "stand by So-and-So because he is one of us."

A Great Scientist. That belief in and profession of the Catholic faith is not inconsistent with deep scientific research and attainment is evidenced by the following sketch of the Dr. Thos. Dwight, the eminent Catholic anatomist taken from the Boston "Republic":

Thomas Dwight, the subject of our sketch, was baptized a Catholic in his early boyhood. After the usual preparation he was sent to Harvard University, where, in 1869, he took his A. B. Two years later he took the LL. D. of Georgetown, of the Jesuits. He made his professional course at Harvard Medical School, and spent some time in foreign universities.

From 1872-76, Dr. Dwight was lecturer and professor of anatomy at Bowdoin. From 1874-83 he was instructor in histology at Harvard, and for the last three years of this period he was, additionally, instructor in topographical anatomy. In 1893 he succeeded Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes as Parkman professor of anatomy, and held this distinguished place with great success until his death. He is the author of many important medical works and was an occasional contributor to the American Catholic Quarterly Review, Scribner's Magazine, the Catholic World and various scientific publications.

A public-spirited citizen, he spared of his valuable time for service on various unpaid State commissions, and was for several years a trustee of the Boston Public Library.

Through all his career he was a devout, even an ascetic, Catholic. While holding membership in many Catholic societies—he served two terms as President of the Catholic Union—his heart was especially enlisted in the work of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, for he loved the poor. He was long time President of the particular Council of that great association, and many of our readers will recall notable instances of his promptness and delicacy in relieving distress. The present writer recalls some of these, and was deeply touched at the revelation of the bent of this good Christian's mind as shown in the pictures of St. Vincent de Paul and Frederic Ozanam, on the desk in his home office.

"A long and painful illness, borne with cheerful fortitude, prepared this great soul for the severance for a time of earthly ties. He was sixty-eight years of age when he passed hence to the reward of his labors for God and humanity."

New York city is evidently crazy over baseball. Well, there are a few fans in Rochester.

Catholic societies are much in evidence these days. It is well.

"If they only voted together, they would dictate things in Rochester", was a remark heard as the great Holy Name parade passed along Main St.

These are the days when the wily politician tries to make the public believe he is really a self-sacrificing philanthropist in disguise.

Remember, October is the month devoted to the Holy Rosary and say the beads, if anything, with more devotion than usual.

Why Not. At the dinner of the fourth degree Assembly of the Knights of Columbus, one of the speakers made the assertion that in none of the Catholic directories disseminated in the Rochester hotels was there a mention of a Catholic Church neither were the hours of service given.

This should not be so, in our opinion. Often, a Catholic traveler wishes to attend Mass or to go to confession. If he could ascertain the location of the nearest Catholic church together with the hours of Mass it would be a source of convenience, also be a means, perhaps, of saving a soul. The omission referred to must be an oversight. Surely, the hotel proprietors would not want to slight the Catholic public. Possibly it is because no one has considered it his province to supply the deficiency.

Good Literature. One of the crying evils of the day is bad and pernicious literature. Perhaps, we should qualify this mean bad reading. Certainly, the daily secular press cannot be classed as literature yet it must be cataloged under the head of reading matter. Scarcely a house entered does not display one or more of the daily secular papers. The young cannot be blamed if they are thrust into their hands, as it were.

In our opinion, there is no duty outside the purely religious one of seeing that the children attend Mass and attend to their Church, that that devolves upon parents so weighty as that of providing their children with good reading matter. To be sure, all children do not take eagerly to reading but to those who do there is no more insidious mental poison than that of a bad book or other piece of reading matter.

Parents should see to it that their children do not read anything which will weaken their faith or impair their morals. They should see to it that a good Catholic paper and magazine is placed before their children. Then they should see to it that Catholic books are on the living room or library table. If possible, read books and magazines before the children are allowed to see them. If these simple rules are followed, then the parent has done his or her duty and incalculable benefit will result. It may easily happen that a child's faith may be preserved and an immortal soul saved thereby.
