Parils of the Molefeet.

A Williamsport doctor while treating a patient for deafness found that watermelon seeds had lodged in both ears. We have always been an ardent advocate of the old fashioned method of attacking watermelons, but it is always safest to use earwax if you are going to give yourself over to complete immersion.—New York Evening Sun.

In the Metropolis.

"So this is gay New York that I have heard so much about in the musical comedies?" "This is it." "And who are those sad looking critters?" "They are the gay New Yorkers."—Kansas City Journal.

His Allment.

Tommy's Aunt—Won't you have another piece of cake, Tommy? Tommy (on a visit)—No, I thank you. Tommy's Aunt—You seem to be suffering from loss of appetite. Tommy—That ain't loss of appetite. What I'm sufferin' from is politeness.—Judge.

MONKEY GREEN PETROLEUM.

Process by which it is converted into lamp oil.

In its original state petroleum is of a murky green color. It is distilled in pans with great furnaces heating beneath them, and as the vapors come from the boiling liquid they are conveyed into pipes surrounded by cold water in which they are condensed.

The first vapor condenses into kerosene and these condense by further heating give the burning oil. A very small percentage of the crude oil put into the pans or stills remains in the form of tar, which by further process is converted into paraffin and wax.

After distillation the residue left is no longer green, but is as transparent as spring water and beautifully tinged with purple and blues. It is not yet ready for use, however, since it must be "washed." The fluid is emptied into a large circular tank in which it is treated with acids, these being poured in and mixed with it by means of powerful pressure from beneath.

When it has been well shaken it is allowed to settle, and the acids then separate from it and sink to the bottom of the tank, taking with them some of the tar that remained in the oil.

The acids are then removed and the oil is washed with salt water. Finally it is bleached, and it is then ready for the market.—Harper's Weekly.

TIGER PROOF HOMES.

Malay Houses, Frail and Flimsy, Sometimes Perch in Tree Tops.

The ordinary Malay house is built on posts from five to seven feet high, but one which I came across was perched high up in a tree. It was the home of a man, his wife and family, and they informed me that it was placed in this unusual situation so as to be out of the way of the numerous tigers which then infested the neighborhood.

As tigers have been known to jump eighteen feet in vertical height somewhere about twenty feet is considered to be the limit of safety. The Malayan house is a frail and flimsy structure of sticks tied together with rattan thatched with palm leaves and walled with platted bamboo or, as in this case, with the bark of trees.

It is therefore an easy matter for a tiger with its great strength to break into a house and attack the inhabitants. Many instances of this have been recorded in Malaya. In one well known case a whole family were killed except one man, who, climbing up into the roof and thus escaping the notice of the tiger, was a horrified observer of the cruel mauling and ultimate slaughter and devouring of his relatives.—London Strand Magazine.
