Indications of Long Life.

It seems to be generally agreed that every person affords physical indications of his prospects of a long or short life. A long lived person, it is said, may be distinguished at sight from a short lived one. In many cases a physician can glance at the hand of a patient and determine whether he will live or not. The primary conditions of longevity are that the heart, lungs and digestive organs as well as the brain, shall be large. If these organs are large the trunk will be long and the limbs comparatively short. The person will appear tall when sitting and short while standing. The hand will have a long and somewhat heavy palm, with short fingers. The brain will be deeply placed, as shown by the low position of the orifice of the ear. The blue, brown or hazel eye is a favorable indication. The nostrils, if large, open and free, indicate large lungs. A pinched and half closed nostril indicates small or weak lungs. These are general points of distinction, but are, of course, subject to the usual individual exceptions.—Exchange.

When Is a Fingernail Dangerous?

Nearly all serious poisoning under prison rule happens in one simple way, by means almost ludicrous. The prisoner, usually by stealth, gets some infection, a boil, carbuncle, a whitlow, anything. Then, as is always happening there, a fly, and yet the contagion of the sore spreads by flies is the chief way, should have been prevented as early as possible. Of course, the prisoner has to conceal the sore, because if he reported it he would be isolated in the smallest possible space, with this object in view they should be equipped with self closing metal doors and windows with wire glass or metal shutters. They should have automatic fire alarms and, above all, an efficient sprinkler system. Steel framing must be insisted and practiced with steel material such as brick, tile, terra cotta or concrete. Under these conditions with insurance on the contents a manufacturing enterprise is reasonably safe.—Engineering Magazine.

Old Time Toasts.

Toasts are now rarely proposed except at public dinners, but there was a time when they were the order of the day at every convivial gathering. The compiler of a book published in 1797, "The Toastmaster," remarks in his preface that "it is the custom in most societies, whether public or private, for the president to call on the company in their turn for a toast. In drinking are consequently often at a loss. This collection of genteel sentiments and toasts will supply their deficiency, as it contains a larger number than ever was before published, the greater part of which are spirited and new." The genteel toasts range from the righteous, such as "May contemplation upon our last resting place check vain hopes and prevent weak despondency," to the frivolous, such as "Lots of beef, oceans of beer, a pretty girl and a thousand a year."—London Chronicle.

Cut the Ship in Two.

"I was a passenger on one of the old fashioned sailing steamers going from London to Australia in 1858," said a traveler. "In the Red sea we ran plump into a vessel, and our boat cut it entirely in two so exactly that it might almost have been done with a huge knife. We went clean through her, and the men on the vessel struck stepped from the two halves of that ship on to our deck. The injured vessel went down within a few minutes after it had been struck. The thing was so strange that when the captain of the vessel we had struck went back to London an investigation was held, and it was substantially proved that the officers had with design got in the immediate track of our vessel in order to bring about a collision in the hope that they could collect insurance money. The captain and some of the officers were punished by imprisonment."

Dumas' Chicken on the String.

Amusing reminiscences of the elder Dumas have been supplied by his cook, Mme. Colin. Dumas' most famous recipe was "poulet a la ficelle" (chicken on the string). The plucked bird is suspended by a string from the ceiling and turned slowly before the fire. The flames, just touching it, brown it slowly. It took time, says the cook, but made a tasty dish.

"Dumas lived a higgledy piggledy life," said Mme. Colin. "He kept open house and always had at least fifteen people to dinner. But he lived from hand to mouth, and at times a sheet served as a tablecloth. After his receptions he sometimes worked all night. Such a muddle displeased me, especially as his guests were bohemians. So I left after six months of it."

A Good Reason.

Two Irishmen were digging a sewer. One of them was a big, strong man about six feet four inches in height, and the other one was a little, puny man about four feet six inches. The foreman came along to see how the work was progressing and noticed that one of them was doing more work than the other. "Look here," he cried, "how is it that little Dennis Dugan, who is only half your size, is doing nearly twice as much work as you, Patrick?" Glancing down to his partner, Pat replied: "And why shouldn't he? Afn't he nearer to it?"

Double Meaning.

"Umbrellas Recovered," was a sign that attracted our attention the other day, but only for a minute. We shook our heads sadly and walked on. It would take a whole galaxy of clairvoyants and a large squad of detectives to get back a few of our lost ones.—Boston News Letter.

Hopes He Can't.

"I don't like that new neighbor of yours," said the grocer.

"Why not?" asked the old time customer.

"He always seems surprised when I tell him I can change a ten dollar bill."—Detroit Free Press.

Wanted More Light.

A dealer was explaining to a prospective woman purchaser the propelling mechanism of a bicycle.

"I understand that perfectly," she said at last. "Now what makes the front wheel go round?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Another Idol Shattered.

It is nonsense to say "Laugh and the world laughs with you." The laughing hyena is always laughing, but the world does not laugh with it.—Salt Lake News.

Act in the valley so that you need not fear those who stand on the hill.—From the Danish.
