

A Call to Arms

We are engaged in the business of hurting men—an industry that has its opponents.

By these zealous folk we are said to love money more than mankind; to ignore the moral code and to be steeped in much wickedness, etc., etc., etc. So let it stand.

Through years we have watched over life's waters the rise and fall of prohibitory waves, only to see them followed by increasing winds of desire, temporarily suppressed. This is also history.

Naturally we have concluded that prohibition is not equal to the task.

All reformation lies with the individual. He has the God-given strength to be made whole if he can be induced to use it.

"Steeped in wickedness" as we are said to be, we still stand ready to contribute to and work with any movement with a distinct purpose to help men get hold of themselves.

We are calling men now to arms—use your strength against wickedness. Only the strong-willed find happiness; only the moderate and fit survive!

FOR THE LITTLE MAID

Paris Sketch Over This Very Delightful Bonnet.

SCHEFFER OF ALICE-MARIE VELVET.

This charming bonnet for a little girl has just arrived from Paris. It is made of blue velvet, and against the blue material are poised little roses made of white silk.

The bows at the side and streamer padding beneath the chin are objective and graceful.

JUST A SUGGESTION.

The Working Girl's Home Life Should Be Pleasant.

The kindest, best-intentioned of parents are often unconsciously neither kind nor fair to the daughter who is a wage earner.

It is quite possible that her hours are longer, her work more trying than that of either father or brother, yet where nothing is in the way of help is expected from them in their leisure hours the business girl is as often as not supposed to do a share of household duties.

If no more active tasks are assigned her she must do her own mending and probably a share of her father's and brother's, and whereas they will be petted-and-pampered-and-generally sympathized with on their return from their more or less arduous labors it seldom occurs to any one that the working girl is probably infinitely more nerve-taxed and worn out than any man is likely to be.

And all this happens because women work beside her home is seldom taken seriously by her own folk.

They are ready enough to pride by her faults—but, indeed, the working girl's shortcomings rarely her own, as her brother's is his—but that it's earning epitomizes her to the same extent and intensity it suffices the masculine breed—whether madam dawns on home folks. This is obviously unfair.

Smart Calling Costume.

Now that the early fall days are here one is obliged to take up certain special duties, and among them is the afternoon call of a more or less formal nature.

For this visit one wears a costume just a trifle more elaborate than the ordinary trotting suit. The illustration shows a delightful confection of the tailored type suitable for afternoon calling.

The suit is of dark brown serge, and, by the way, brown is to be one of the leading colors this fall, with trimmings of black braid and buttons.

The brown felt hat is trimmed with brown and white feathers and a velvet bow.

Went Up Ahead.

One of the girls in our organization in grammar school, when asked why the noun "bachelor" was singular, blithely answered, "Because it is very singular they don't get married."

She went up to the head of the class.

Why Don't They Learn?

The people with the women who want to behave like men is that they have got scared to behave like gentlemen.

HUMOROUS QUIPS

Poetry and Prose:

I did not know before we met,
That you were such a beauty to me.

I did not know that you were
All the love for you I had known.

I did not know that you were
The most beautiful girl I ever seen.

I did not know that you were
The girl I wanted to marry.

I did not know that you were
The girl I wanted to marry.

I did not know that you were
The girl I wanted to marry.

I did not know that you were
The girl I wanted to marry.

I did not know that you were
The girl I wanted to marry.
