A Hidden Inheritance

This made his present disappointment only the keener; he shrank from going home to meet Cynthia's questioning gaze. And as it happened that when he did get back from his work a full hour later than usual, he found the hateful old arm chair already arrived before him.

To his poignant embarrassment and regret Cynthia was frankly enraptured with it.

"What a beautiful old chair!" she cried. "Did anyone ever see such handsome legs and wonderful carving?"

"And such lovely horse-hair covering." Hugh said with a grim smile of sarcasm.

"Oh, that part of it can be easily remedied," Cynthia nodded, unconsciously paraphrasing the words of Aunt Helen's will. "Still, even as it stands, it's a beauty. I'm sure it is worth at least ten pounds, my dear."

"If I thought it was said Hugh, in somewhat unnecessary savage tones. "I'd sell it tomorrow."

"I think I should rather keep it—especially as it was your aunt's favorite chair," she began.

"I'm very glad you like it so much," he said bitterly, and letting his face fall in his hands "especially as it's about all of Aunt Helen's property we are ever likely to possess."

Cynthia's lips quivered a second, and the lines of her pretty mouth took a downward curve. She said nothing, however, but went over and laid a soft arm tenderly about her husband's shoulder.

"Is that why you are so cross?" she asked, stooping to plant a kiss on the top of his head just above the brows where his hair began laterly to show premature grey.

"Am I cross, dear?" he asked penitently. "I am sorry. But you see—I was thinking chiefly of you."

"I am all right, Hugh," she said with well-feigned cheerfulness, though there was a perceptible tremor in her voice. "The only thing I am sorry for Hugh, if you had not married me this would not have happened."

"You are not sorry, dear, that I married you, are you?" he asked in tones of exceeding tenderness. "I am not, anyhow. And after all why should I quarrel with Aunt Helen's disposition of her property? She warned me of what would happen if I displeased her, and I went into the thing with eyes wide open. I chose the greater treasure of the two, and I am deeply thankful to possess her."

His arms went lovingly about her, and he laid his cheek caressingly against hers. "And still," he went on in half-regretful tones, "I did hope your profession as milliner. It is very evident that she badly wanted us to have the money all the same. God bless her tender heart!"

"I'm so glad," Cynthia said and there was a sound of happy tears in her voice, "so very glad, darling, that after all you had not to pay too dearly for me."

"Too dearly!" Hugh repeated in tones of deepest tenderness, "as though one could pay too dearly for you, my pearl of great price, my greatest treasure on earth, whose price is far above rubies!"—Nora Tynan O'Ma-nearly everything. And we must only make the best of things—and of the old armchair!" she finished, with a wan smile. That Cynthia intended to put the latter part of her intention into speedy practice was abundantly evident when Hugh returned a few evenings later he found her struggling with a hammer, some brass-headed nails, some pink ball-fringed gimp, and several yards of chintz adorned with an old-world-pattern of roses and lilies and carnations. "It's pretty, Hugh, isn't it?" she asked brightly, holding up dar-

Rev. L. Schwabl, Dead

Priest 44 Years. At St. Joseph's Church 19 Years

Rev. Leonard Schwabl, C. S. S. R., assistant rector of St. Joseph's Church for nearly nineteen years, died in St. Mary's Hospital Sunday, he had been ill only ten days. He had rheumatism, but a few days ago pneumonia set in and he failed rapidly.

Father Schwabl was born October 18, 1844, in Leoganz, Austria, and in April, 1869, was ordained a priest. Upon his arrival in this country he went to St. Peter's church, Philadelphia, and afterward to a church in Pittsburg and to St. Michael's church in Baltimore. He was transferred to St. Joseph's church, Rochester, November 23, 1894.

In Europe, as well as in this country, Father Schwabl was engaged in mission work. He was widely known in this city for his attentions to the sick and as confessor for the sisterhoods. He was retiring, constant and devoted. He was a member of the Redemptorist order.

The office of the dead was recited Tuesday night at 8 o'clock. The funeral was held Wednesday and for more than two hours members of the Catholic clergy and laity of Rochester filed past the bier.

Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Hickey, celebrated solemn high mass of requiem, with Very Rev. D. J. Curran, vicar general, as assistant priest; Rev. John Englert, C. S. S. R., of New York city, as deacon; Rev. Florian Reichert, C. S. S. R., of Esopus, as subdeacon; Rev. Dr. J. F. Goggin of St. Bernard's Seminary, as master of ceremonies; Rev. A. F. Temmerman of St. Monica's, as cantor; Rev. J. F. Muckie and Rev. J. Baierl, as acolytes; Rev. John Ganey, as book bearer; Rev. Daniel Quigley, as candle bearer and Rev. Father Hoeven as crozier bearer.

Rev. Francis T. Parr of St. Mary's church in Buffalo preached in German, after which Bishop Hickey gave a brief eulogy in English. The Gregorian chants were sung by the men's choir and the boys from St. Joseph's school, under the direction of the Choir Master Charles J. Stupp.

The guard of honor was composed of the staff officers of the K. A. of St. John, and the active bearers were the following officers of Commanderies 9 and 39 of the Knights of St. John; Captain John J. Derringer, Lieutenant Joseph Wendling, Captain F. J. Wegman, Captain Henry Baierl and Lieutenant Otto Merkle. Of the many organizations which sent delegations to the funeral was Branch 81, C. M. B. A., which was represented by 100 men. Among the distinguished priests in the sanctuary was Rev. Joseph Schneider, C. S. S. R., of Baltimore, provincial for the Redemptorist Order for this province.
