SPARE THE BRIDE.

Accidents May Result From the Throwing of Old Shoes.

Since the safe and sane Fourth has been so admirably launched, there should be a movement for the safe and sane speeding of the departing bride. Many a bad accident has been traced to the throwing of rice and old slippers. Like other old customs, it may be modified with benefit.

Confetti, the earliest substitute for rice, is less painful, but newer and more poetical are flower petals to throw after the bride. These may be bought from the florist or can be fashioned from tissue paper.

Another novelty for the safe and sane good luck speeding are tiny horse shoes, slippers, rabbits, feet and other charms cut in silver paper. These can be bought, but are easily prepared at home.

Some original maid of honor prepared soft balls for the wedding party made of cotton covered with silvered paper, on which were painted various mottoes appropriate to the occasion.

The Girl in Business. Etiquette as related to the business world is an entirely different thing from etiquette in the social world.

But there are certain small courtesies that are practiced in society that would be out of place in a busy office. The woman employee, the stenographer, the private secretary, the bookkeeper, or whatever her position may be, has a perfect right to expect her employer to treat her politely.

Sometimes it happens that a girl makes lifelong friends among her business associates, but it is always best to err on the side of caution.

If she happens to take the fancy of her employer and he is a man of democratic spirit he will seek out the girl in her home after business hours.

When taking one's seat at table the chair should not be drawn too close. For nothing gives a more awkward appearance than for a person to be seated too near to the table.

As soon as seated take up the napkin and if a roll is within it put the roll down at the left. The napkin is then laid partly unfolded across the lap.

Grapefruit and oranges are eaten with a spoon, which would be at the right. Oysters on the shell are eaten whole, if possible, not cut in half, and are eaten with an oyster fork.

It is not good manners to crumble bread or to eat bread between courses as though one were hungry.

For fish, if there is not a special fish knife, one may take a small piece of bread in the left hand and use it to separate the bones from the fish.

Little Points of Etiquette. It is courteous to shake hands with a guest in your own house, and many hostesses repeat the handshaking when he leaves.

A girl or younger woman should rise when an older woman enters the room and remain standing until she is seated. It is customary to rise to receive a guest, whether it be man or woman.

FOOTWEAR LORE.

Shoes and Stockings Match. Skirt Linings This Season.

Colored shoes and stockings to match or contrast with the dress are now considered quite out. The latest idea is to have them match the lining and trimmings of the dress.

For street wear the idea can only be carried out in dark colors, but for indoor and evening frocks it is capable of infinite variety.

This stunning linen frock, designed for the schoolgirl of sixteen, is carried out in a natural colored linen of the soft, unfinishable weave.

Common Sense Living and Right Thinking Remedy For Most Things.

Most headaches can be cured by common sense living and ordinary care of the functions of the body.

Overwork, overworry and fretting are prolific causes of headache, especially with the nervous, high strung woman who takes too much out of herself.
