Home Rule, June, 1914

Forecast of Irish Parties.

John E. Redmond.

It would be difficult for American sympathizers to overestimate the sensation created by a statement made by Mr. Lunden, M. P., with the authority of Mr. Redmond, at a recent meeting of the East Limerick executive of the United Irish League.

"Not later than June 7," declared Mr. Lunden, "Home Rule will be the law of Ireland by the consent of the King, and will be placed on the statute book. But the interval will be a time of hard work and not of rest for the Nationalist party."

Owing to the activities of the anti-Home Rulers, Mr. Redmond and his colleagues have arranged a final campaign to be carried on in Great Britain and in Ulster. 600 on 600 meetings will be held within the next ten months in England, Scotland and Wales.

An interesting forecast of the position of parties when the first Irish House of Commons meets next year has been made by Shaw Desmond, a well-known Irish journalist.

He expects that John Redmond, "conservative of conservatives," will have a party of 100. Facing him, their present threats of boycott notwithstanding, will be the Orange irreconcilables 30 or 40 in number, while to William O'Brien he concedes a group of only 5 or 6. T. M. Healey, he says, will lead a clerical party.

In course of time, however, Desmond predicts there will be only two parties in the Irish Parliament, the Conservative-Nationalists and the Labor or Democratic party, the latter led by J. Devlin, M. P., who will gather behind him the cohorts of industrial Belfast and Dublin. Devlin, however, will have to reckon with Jim Larkin and an irreconcilable faction of syndicalists. "The religious cry under Home Rule will no longer appeal to the masses of the Irish people," we are assured. "Once divorced from the political struggle, the religious difficulty will solve itself."

Among the lesser men who the writer believes will one day play their parts largely in Irish affairs he mentions Lordan Sherlock, Lord Mayor of Dublin, whom he describes as a "born diplomat, who has accomplished the impossible by winning the affections of both Unionist and Nationalist."

James J. Ryan, a prominent Philadelphia, has been lately touring Ireland and has left behind him impressions that he is a citizen who believes in a policy of "thorough." He has told his friends down in his native County of Kilkenny that next year he will organize a party of Irish-Americans who will come over specially to celebrate the inauguration of an Irish Parliament in Dublin.

A Toronto tourist who preceded him a few days, has identical ideas of importing 500 or more Irish-Canadians, so that the pressure on housing—accommodation in the Irish metropolis next year is already looking alarming. Never has Ireland enjoyed such a rush of tourists as it has this season, and many of them have already booked rooms in anticipation of a greater demand next year. Political activities in the north attracted also quite a considerable number of people who had made up their minds to see something of the disorder which the "twelfth of July" usually brings along, but most of them came away disappointed.

The truth is, the Belfast people have now settled down to the situation in quite a philosophic spirit. It was easier to precipitate a shindy in the northern capital ten or twelve years ago than it is now in 1913.
