A hostess who wished to provide novel diversion for her afternoon guests prepared a number of sheets of paper with the name of a course of an elaborate dinner written on each, and at the bottom of each sheet were written the words. "I vote for."

The papers were distributed, and the ests were invited to write an original recipe for the course, which fell to her lot. A quarter of an hour was allowed for the writing of the recipes, and at the end of the time the papers were gathered up and redistributed, so that no one had the paper she had written. As no names were on the papers no one knew whose maper she held, and thus with perfact boldness she read aloud the recipe on the paper Lady David Beatty, wife of the Brit-in hand.
