No Alum— No Dyspepsia

Look to the food. Eat heartily of hot breads, hot biscuit, hot cakes, made light and tasty with Royal Baking Powder, and snap your fingers at dyspepsia. It is the tasty, appetizing food that aids digestion.

There is a quality in Royal Baking Powder coming from the purity, wholesomeness and fitness of its ingredients, which promotes digestion. Food raised by it will not distress. This peculiarity of Royal has been noted by hygienists and physicians, and they are accordingly earnest in its praise, especially recommending it in the preparation of food for those of delicate digestion.

—Christians were accustomed from the first to call the Blessed Virgin "the Mother of God," because they saw that it was impossible to deny her that title without denying St. John's words: "The Word" (that is, God the Son) "was made flesh."—Newman.

The man who wakes the public conscience must not expect to find life entirely pleasant. Alarm clocks are never popular.

Even if slapping a wife may be good for her, according to a Chicago doctor, the practice is not likely to become general.

The high cost of living in Europe is not made any less high by the sweeping reductions in the number of those who are alive.

According to one of the war aviators, they have to fly high in order to be safe. Yes, and then they are not disgusting safe.

For an implement definitely relegated to the military scrap heap by the experts the bayonet is doing an amazing amount of work during these days of blood and horror.

IT WAS A GOOD PORTRAIT.

And it had a sobering effect upon "Hollering" Jones.

A well known illustrator who makes interesting western pictures since made the acquaintance of a sober but good humored cowboy who resided in the appellation of "Hollering" Jones.

In physical appearance this man was typical of his kind and the artist made several studies of him, both in repose and in his favorite diversion of "hollering." Some of the studies were sold by the artist to an eastern magazine. They showed Jones in his most "hollering" state. A year later the artist again visited the region. He was soon approached by Mr. Jones himself bearing one of the pictures, which he had torn from the magazine in which it was printed. Pointing to it, he said:

"Is that me?"

"Well," replied the artist, "I got the general idea from you, of course, but—"

"Oh, I ain't takin' no offense," Jones made haste to say. "It's all right; only if it's me say so."

"If you put it to me that way," said the artist, "I can only reply that it is a fairly good portrait of you."

"The men here on the ranch agree with you. So I look like that when I holler, do I?"

"I think you do."

"In that case," said Hollering Jones, "all I've got to say is that Hollering Jones has hollered his last holler. Hereafter, when I celebrate I do so with a tin horn. In my opinion no man has a right to look like that—not round white folks, anyhow."—Youth's Companion.

TREES THAT ROB THE SEA.

Nipa Palms and Mangroves of Sarawak Are Land Suckers.

The river banks in Sarawak (British protectorate in Borneo) are lined with nipa palms and mangroves. At low tide you can see the mangroves standing on trestles of black woody roots, looking like snakes writhing in the mud. Upon these pedestals crowns of bright green leaves thirty to forty feet in height form aquatic forests at the mouth of the rivers all along the coast. Each branch is weighed down by fruit, which when ripe drops into the mud and starts a new tree.

The nipa palm has matted roots, which easily retain the silt and jetam carried down by the unceasing current of the waters, and it has an angular fruit, which, like that of the mangrove, sinks into the mud, germinates and forms forests on its own account. The incessant action of these encroaching trees adds continually to the land. Indeed, there are certain aged natives who have been heard to say that part of the coast near Sirk, although exposed to the constant surf of the northeast monsoon, has encroached on the sea for two miles or more during their lifetime.

When the land reclaimed by the mangroves and nipa palms becomes drier the trees die and give place to other tropical vegetation.—From "Races of Sarawak" in Wide World Magazine.
