When Matter Conquered Mind. Lord Wolsey maintained that Orestes would have been the more of a desperate battle in 1815 if Napoleon's bodily strength had then prevailed on a par with his brain power. "The more I study the Waterloo campaign," Wolsey told Grant Dux, "the more highly do I think of Napoleon. If his physical condition and energy had been equal to the power of his mind, I think he would have succeeded in his design and would first have beaten the Prussians and then driven us back on Ostend." In spite of his oldest and contemptible character Napoleon was the greatest man of whom we know anything and quite unlike anybody else.—London Mirror.

That the Romans were very familiar with concrete and gave consideration to its use in examination of the concrete work in the forum clearly shows. Their concrete contained generally only two kinds of stone, travertine and marble in equal parts. Basalt is a hard, closely knit rock, very similar to our blaststone or trap rock in color as well as quality. Travertine is a volcanic rock not so hard as basalt, considerably lighter in color, and was desirable on account of its porosity, which insured a good bond with the cement. In all the Roman work the combination of the travertine and the basalt is clearly distinguishable.

Punishment for giving short weight is far from new, and the Turks long ago took drastic measures to check this tendency on the part of tradesmen. The Sultan Achmet II, walking through the streets of Stamboul, saw at the door of a baker's shop the owner, his hands tied behind him, with one ear nailed to a post. Upon inquiry he was told the cause of the poor fellow's predicament. "Who is he?" asked the sultan. "May it please your highness," was the reply, "he supplies the bread for the imperial seraglio." "Ah, my baker? Then set up another post and nail his other ear to it. The sultan's baker should have a double reason for honesty."

The "kasabi" torta (we get our word "tart" from torta of Hispanio-America) is the biggest regularly made cracker on earth. It is made from the kasabi root and lightly fired in cakes about the size of a small parasol.

A cracker for a hat—such indeed is sometimes the use made by the Latin people of the kasabi torta when needing a temporary sunshade (sombbrero). The torta is always made bowl shaped so it can be balanced on the head without any particular effort—and provided no wind interferes. Rain, however, quickly soaks and collapses this remarkable and useful edible headgear.—London Express.
