Panama's Famous Arch.
 One of the most famous "flat arches" in the world is to be found in the ruin of the church of Santo Domingo, Panama City, and has stood for nearly three centuries. The arch has an unsupported span of thirty-six feet five inches and stands twenty feet from the ground. Tradition has it that the "luminous monks planned and built their own church. This arch was near the front of the entrance and supported the organ loft, and it fell down three times as soon as the supports were taken away. Then a monk who was neither an architect nor an engineer "dreamed" an arch and drew up a plan according to his vision. When the arch was for the fourth time completed the designer stood beneath it while the supports were removed, staking his life on his inspired work. It stood and still stands. The church was destroyed by fire in 1737, and now nothing remains but this marvelous arch.—Wide World Magazine.

Burning Byron's Autobiography.
 May 17, 1824, witnessed a famous literary bonfire—the solemn burning of Byron's autobiography. The manuscript had been given by the poet to Thomas Moore on the sole condition that it should not be published until after his death. Moore sold the MS. to John Murray for 2,000 guineas, but after Byron's death in the spring of 1824 he and others began to doubt the propriety of printing it. Lord John Russell and Washington Irving, to whom it was submitted, declared it too gross and libelous for publication, and Murray, generously foregoing his claim to the money advanced to Moore, called a council of Byron's friends, which met in the publisher's drawing room at Albemarle street on the evening of May 17, and committed the manuscript to the flames.—London Chronicle.

Snake's Sixth Sense.
 That the snake has a real sixth sense by which it finds its mate in the woods and unerringly trails its prey is the belief of a man who is a special student of snakes. The seat of this sense of direction is supposed to be the curious forked tongue, which can have none of the uses to which the tongue is usually applied, but is a feeler and more and is incessantly darting about as the snake travels. A lizard was seen to come from beneath a house in the woods, take a zigzag course and disappear under a box ten feet away. Two minutes later a black snake appeared, passed over the lizard's exact course, keeping the tongue constantly seeking the trail, and, darting under the box, quickly emerged with the lizard in its jaw. Many other observations seem to prove that the tip of the tongue is the guide.—Exchange.

Boasting.
 "My boy, whatever you do, never brag."
 "No, father."
 "At least, not until after you have done it."
 "And then?"
 "Then if you were clever enough to have done it well you will be clever enough to know that it's not worth bragging about."—Detroit Free Press.
