For Young Folks

The sweet little girl here pictured is Miss Genevieve Fox, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Lytle Fox of New York City and Southampton, N. Y. Recently she took part in a series of tableaux at Southampton, where she lives in summer. There were many other children in the living pictures, which were given to help the poor children of the east side of New York and enable some of them to take a brief vacation at the seaside or on some of the many farms in New York and New Jersey that throw open their doors to these little folks. As the photograph shows, Miss Genevieve made a very attractive picture.

The Lloyd Lindsay Race—Two or three pairs of balls are placed in a row thus:

Each set of balls is represented by a team of two players. The teams start from a point twenty, thirty or fifty yards away (an official will permit) from the balls. Each pair runs hand in hand till it reaches a line drawn about eight to ten feet in front of the balls, thus:

On this line, opposite each pair, are placed three potatoes or tennis balls. Each player tries to throw the potatoes or balls opposite his ball into his ball, one at a time. If he misses he must retrieve his potato and throw it again from the ball line until he has all three in the ball line or all his retrieving of misses at one time or as he wishes, just as he prefers. As soon as either partner succeeds in this, but not sooner, he can help out his teammate by going behind his ball and throwing back to him his missed potatoes or balls, but not otherwise assist him. A team cannot race back to the starting point till it has all its potatoes in its balls. Then it goes back hand in hand, and the first team crossing the starting line wins.—Scouting.

Who! Who!
 It sounds like an Indian cry, but it is not. It is a call made up of parts of three important English words, and it is addressed to American, is of the present time. This who! who! who! is a new word composed of the first two letters of the important watchwords of the Campfire Girls—work, health, love—these really comprising about all there is to life. The call, therefore, is not only euphonious, but is followed by a long, rolling echo when sung in the right tone where the echoes live.—St. Nicholas.

The Sly Little Man.
 I know of a dry little, sly little man, Who comes o'er our threshold when we are asleep.
 Though little he ostres for the sunshine and light, He haunts our library when it is night.
 When you're reading his paper with care, And I'm looking all over in the bookcase for a chair, With sudden look up from her sewing, "My dear, Perhaps you don't know that this man's heart beats here!"
 Then you must read the story of the man, Next to table and table of his heart in books, And out on the stairway and down in the hall, See I can't find the sly little man at all.

For Young Folks

 The ordinary child and ordinary man like him the performance of a feat of strength is regarded as a feat. A feat is a straight line that at every point comes to be a straight line, and the earth's surface is a plane that every moment comes to be a plane. Following the surface of the earth does not carry us to the under side, but there is an upper side. There is only a boundless surface. But if it were possible for us to build a globe on the globe as large as the one we inhabit, would it not have an upper and an under side?
 The rain comes the ground to grow, and the sun comes the snow to melt, but we cannot apply the idea of growth in this sense to nature as a whole, but only to parts of nature. Desires are caused by nature's laws to fall, but what causes the earth to fall forever and ever and never to fall upon the body that is said to attract it—John Burroughs in Atlantic Monthly.

International Questions.
 International questions constitute one of the greatest known issues of the human race. International questions are so broad that they do not require any close reasoning to solve or express opinions about them. That is their great beauty. One can discuss almost anywhere without any special degree of hitting bottom, and one can say almost anything about an international question without being called to account except by some one who is equally unreliable. Local questions are quite different in that respect. Local questions are much more precise and less reasonable. One cannot be sure of his data and more consistent in his conclusion. In explaining local questions there is always danger that the man you are explaining to knows more about the matter than you do yourself. If you must make important statements do it in the way that best conceals your ignorance.—Life.

When the World Was New.
 The world is biggest when we are young enough to conceive of the picture as an empire and the city here as a republic. Time is longer when we are young enough to see a day as an epoch, a week as an era, a summer vacation by seaside or lake shore as eternity itself. As we grow older the world grows smaller, and so does time. Space and time are nothing for you or me as we are held museum for them to be held or to travel. The boy understands ten feet because that is three long strides, and ten years because he has just lifted them. Now we have lived another ten and yet another, but the first ten were the longest and are the truest measure, for the more years we are granted the more accurate the more important, but in our demand for more.—Catholics Weekly.

Why the Garden is Born.
 It is a strange and perhaps old tale that most men and women understand with the least sense and appreciation for good literature have no gift of imagination for selective expression in literature, and it is an strangely and equally surprising that many of those who have most cannot play any instrument of any kind, sing, or dance. The world is crowded with people who have the talent for the most, but cannot play any instrument of any kind, sing, or dance. Gargoyles of Notre Dame.
 The gargoyles of Notre Dame are commonly associated with the medieval spirit and queer obsessions of old France. As a matter of fact, most of them were executed under the direction of Viollet le Duc when the cathedral was restored, no earlier than the middle of last century. Mr. Henry Howarth, who is an authority on architectural subjects, declares that most of the gargoyles carved for Notre Dame at the time of the restoration were done by an Englishman named Pringle. "Though I believe this fact is now remembered by very few,"—Pittsburgh Gazette.

The Friskiness of Youth.
 Callers were at the door and Bobbie was told to show them to the parlor. He did so, and while his mother was fixing herself up he sat there rather embarrassed. Presently, knocking around the room, he said: "Well, what do you think of our stuff anyway?"—Kansas City Star.

Hopeless Case.
 Optimist—Cheer up! There isn't a cloud on your horizon! Pessimist—That's just my luck! I'm even ahead of you of the silver lining! Oh, what's the use!—Chicago News.

George Washington Outlets.
 "Pop," said little Rolfe, "why are parlor ornaments called ornaments?" "My son," replied Rolfe's mother, "cannot list 'I don't know.' Rollie's plain language is a masterpiece."—Pittsburgh Gazette.

Who's Who?
 "My son," said the aged and expectant man reflectively, "never will I make a woman's sign by the date of her birth."—Woman's Home Companion.

Care of the Body in Summer

Care of the Body in Summer.
 The body is the temple of the soul, and it is our duty to keep it in the best possible condition. In the summer months, when the heat is so oppressive, it is especially important to take care of the skin. The skin should be washed frequently with soap and water, and the body should be kept cool by wearing light-colored, loose-fitting clothing. It is also important to drink plenty of water and to avoid excessive exposure to the sun.
