The Hackstaff Case

A Story Showing How Justice May Err. By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

In the village of Atherton lived a widow forty years old who had a head for business.

However, the Hackstaff couple seemed to get on very well, at least till Mrs. Hackstaff got tired of repairing houses

"She had better have kept him busy," said the woman.

"I was noticed that the Hackstaffs were absent from home a great deal, but that they never went together."

During the autumn the Hackstaffs were observed to be away a great deal.

A match had been touched to these various items of kindling, and a brisk blaze started.

There were several missing links in this explanation.

Opinion which had long been growing against the accused, and the fact that the prosecuting attorney was showing great energy

Mrs. Hackstaff, meanwhile having crossed the Atlantic and traversed the Mediterranean and the Red sea.

All this took time. A few days before Hackstaff was to be banded a cablegram was handed him from his wife.

When Mr. Hackstaff buried his wife's dress a small boy was in a tree above the spot where he put it in the ground about to grasp a bird's nest.

"Great heavens!" she exclaimed, "I hope he hasn't murdered his wife!"

Many believed that the authorities should be given the evidence of the buried dress, but they all considered that it was the duty of some one else than themselves to bring forth the information.

As to the origin of the rose there is a legend that a Jewish maid of Bethlehem (whom Southern names Zillah) was beloved by one Hamull, a British soldier.

From other sources it would appear that the rose was first white, and the Turkish way it was colored with the blood of Mohammed and will never yield the flower to his on the ground, contrary to the tale, the Greeks held that it derived its color from the blood of Venus when she trod on a thorn of the white thorn when going to the assistance of the dying Adonis.

Greater Lake's Gamy Treat.

Whether it be from the temperature or the quality of the water is not known, but it is the testimony of experienced anglers that pond, for pond—Greater Lake trout are harder fighters than trout found elsewhere.

"Around the edges of the lake," said the general superintendent of the park, "there is no foliage to entangle your hook and line, and it is the ideal place for the amateur fisherman."

There was the lake was so clear that you could see to a depth of forty feet the first fish I caught, I saw take the fly. I saw every motion of his body until I finally landed him on the bank, which I finally did with the aid of one of the concessioners in the park.
