The Acme of Proposals

By EDITH V. ROSS

One day Marguerite Phillips was walking in the grounds about her father's stately mansion when she heard something drop.

I am not free to enter your grounds for a near view of your ravishing beauty, but there is nothing to prevent my saluting you and admiring you from a distance.

How godlike seemed this heavenly wanderer compared with any of those who had yet sought her love!

Was ever a Greek girl more honored by the weaving of a god than I by this daring rover of the ethereal blue?

The Grimshaw-Greene Secret

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

In one of the regiments that sailed from Florida for the Spanish American war were Privates Tom Grimshaw and Oliver Greene, who appeared to be intimate friends.

After while it was noticed that a soldier named Evans was added to the duo, making a trio. He was more like Grimshaw than Greene, being a larger man and stronger than either of the other two.

The trio friendship lasted but a few days, and it was noticed from the first that Grimshaw did not relish the advent of Evans into the companionship.

During an interval in the fighting at Santiago Grimshaw and Evans were sent to go off by themselves and after a while Grimshaw returned with a black eye. When Evans came in a little later it was noticed that there was blood on his shirt.

For the next few days Greene seemed to be much troubled. He evidently was little to say to Evans, who was grim, keeping much by himself except when performing military duties.

Toward the close of the fighting at Santiago Greene was severely wounded. He was picked up and carried to the rear on a stretcher. A surgeon attended him, and he was placed in the hospital.

Wickhamshaw, of his company, who was discharged from the hospital, reported that Greene had been taken from the ward in which he had been first placed and given a room by himself.

Then it became known that Grimshaw had visited his chum, but there was no evidence that Evans had done so. By this time the boys had begun to chaff Grimshaw and Evans about their rivalry for the friendship of Greene and asked Evans why he did not also visit his wounded friend.

Soon after this the war closed, and the troops were removed to Montauk Point on Long Island. Grimshaw was one of the few who went home in good health. Evans was down with typhoid fever. Grimshaw was devoted to Greene, and as soon as he received his discharge he took his friend away from the camp, and this was the end of the matter of the trio friendship so far as the regiment knew anything about it.

One day Grimshaw met one of his war comrades on the street and asked him to dine with him, stating that he had been married and wished to introduce his companion in arms to his wife. When the guest met Mrs. Grimshaw he looked at her in a sort of bewilderment.

"Are you or are you not Oliver Greene?" he asked. "I am Olivia Greene Grimshaw."
