ONE KIND CHRISTMAS TREE

In Sweden wooden candleabra like the one in the picture are frequently used instead of Christmas trees for the display of gifts.

Oh, to Have Dwelt In Bethlehem!

Oh, to have dwelt in Bethlehem
When the star of the Lord
Shone bright
To have sheltered the holy wanderers
On that blessed Christmas night,
To have kissed the tender, way worn feet
Of the mother, undressed,
And with reverent wonder and deep delight
To have tended the Holy Child!
Hush! Such a glory was not for thee,
But that care may still be thine,
For are there not little ones still to aid
For the sake of the child divine?
Are there no wandering pilgrims now
To thy heart and thy home to take?
And are there no mothers whose weary hearts
You can comfort for Jesus' sake?
—Adelaida Procter.

The Highland Lassie on Christmas. Grant in his "Highland Customs" tells how the Scotch lassie rose with the first gray streak of dawn to bake her Christmas scones, or sour scones, hard hot cakes, soft cakes and pannich poron. The day's enjoyment always consisted of trials of skill and games and wound up with a grand evening meal. In some parts of Scotland, as in England, it became customary to hang a branch of mistletoe in the middle of the room or over the door, and if by accident or otherwise a girl passed under it any young man was privileged to give her as many kisses as there were berries on one of its sprays.

A Little Chat About Honesty

In this little chat we want to talk particularly to the man who thinks the telephone operator sometimes "fibs" to him when she says, "the line is busy."

In the first place "Central" is a pretty busy girl. She's not apt to make useless work for herself. In learning that the line was "busy," she performs as many operations as she would in completing a call. It's easier for her to give you the connection you want at once than to put you off with the "busy" report.

Her report, "the line is busy," does not necessarily mean that the man you want is using his telephone. It may mean that we are trying to reach him for another call which called before you did. If he's on a party line, it may mean that one of the other parties is using the line.

Next we are going to tell you something you really ought to know about unanswered calls.

THE SOUTH'S CHRISTMAS AFTER THE WAR

ON a typical plantation the first Christmas after the war came gloomily indeed, writes Mary E. Bryan in Uncle Remus' Magazine. A number of the negroes still inhabited the old "quarter," but they were too demoralized and unsettled in mind to work.

The cotton crop had been a failure, and old debts had swallowed up the proceeds. No boxes and barrels containing good things for Christmas had been rolled from the steamboats out upon the plantation landing, as in better times. But Christmas morning there was the old chorus, "Merry 'Chris'mus," under the window.

The master of the house swung open the window impatiently and called out, "There's no Christmas for you here; you will have to make your own Christmas now." An old patriarch of the tribe stepped forward and bared his gray head. "We's brought 't 'Chris'mus' membrane for master and mistis, please, sah," he said. They went in then. Each had a gift and laid it on the table in silence.

One brought a dressed chicken, another a dozen eggs and the patriarch brought a baked possum. A pair of home knit socks, a bag of hickory nuts and a basket of walnuts were among the offerings.

When their gifts had been deposited they started to the mill when the man of the house, affected almost to tears, called them back and thanked them.

The patriarch pulled out the contents of their Santa Claus stockings to share with the visitors, and the house mother brought out a jug of homemade white. There was a little Christmas cheer after all.

The third morning money was brought away. Every heart responded to the prayer uttered by the negro leader when he was departing.

"De Lawd bless you and your family, master, and help us ter feel an ack right towa'ds obe anudder."

The Catholic Journal would make a Good Christmas Present
