A SLIGHT MISTAKE

An Episode of Shakedown City

By F. A. MITCHEL

The wild and woolly west is now a thing of the past. If gun play, gambling and horse stealing are in vogue in any part of the United States we hear nothing of them.

The rivals were evidently impressed with this view of the case and asked how "them gentlemanly fights" were conducted.

ANGELA'S HERO

He Turned Out to Be What She Wanted

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Sunderland was one of those places that are very nice for young persons to live in until the time comes for the boys to choose careers and the girls to get married or in these days of woman's independence to choose a career.

his straight black hair and silent tongue. "Hero, indeed!" he was muttering in his sleep, and Mrs. Blake, hearing him, smiled secretly.

"I wonder why he was telling Angela that the rose garden is haunted," she thought. "He knows she is quite fearless at night and might take to wandering around the garden to run our ghost to earth! Strange, Jim never spoke to me about the ghost; but of course, I am not looking for adventures."

"How do you mean?" he said, putting his hand to his forehead. "How do you mean the laconic reply 'Air you from the settlement?'"

"Yes, ma'am. 'Any chance for anybody to make a livin' there?'" "Reckon, but a good lookin' woman like you don't need to make a livin'."

"Suppose the husband can't make a livin' for himself?" "Then I reckon the wife ought to do it for both."

"The woman, who had an independent air about her, whipped up her horse and left Mr. Atkins standing beside the road, staring after her. He was thinking that as soon as she got into the settlement, which was called Shakedown City, all settlements appended the word 'City' to their name."

The secret of the duel was divulged by one of the seconds at the Golden Eagle saloon about midnight and revealed by most of those present organized and unorganized and named and unnamed.

About half past eight principal in the evening affair, attended by his second, left his residence and proceeded to the ground. The master of ceremonies was accompanied by the surgeon, a recent medical graduate, who had gone west to establish a practice.

When the woman reached the border of Shakedown City, the center of the town, she asked him: "Any tavern in the town?" she asked him. "Yes, ma'am," was the reply.

"This town ought to be above gun play in the streets by this time. You men are mighty uncivilized in such affairs anyhow. If you two men want to fight about a lady, why don't you do it in a fashion that would do honor to her instead of mixin' her up in a common shootin' match?"

"Angela, I wonder if you realize that you are the only one of our old set who has never married." She smiled at the thought of Angela Thornton.

"Yes," said Angela calmly. "I do realize it. Edna, I suppose the rest of you wives and mothers all wonder why I am so contented."

"Yes," said Angela calmly. "I do realize it. Edna, I suppose the rest of you wives and mothers all wonder why I am so contented."

Angela Thornton slipped cautiously down the front stairs and let herself into the garden. The Blakes prided themselves on their lovely gardens, especially the rose garden, which was enclosed in a high hedge of Cherokee roses.

It was a pleasant night for ghost hunting. Presently there came a throbbing sound overhead and a deeper shadow on the lawn, though now the clouds had parted to let the moon shine through quite clearly.

Angela started, looked up and saw a great object bearing down upon her out of the night sky. A great black winged thing. No, it was white where the moonlight touched it.

"Why, it's an aeroplane!" she thought and clasped her hands in delighted wonder for she had never seen one before. The illustrated papers. "The poor man has lost his way."
