Personal.

There is a chastity of honor that feels a stain like a wound.

Collop Monday. Collop Monday is the Monday before Shrove Tuesday. The name refers to the dinner which in some parts of England is almost universal on that day. It is customary to have collops of bacon and eggs for dinner. Go into some districts in England at dinner time on Collop Monday and you will be sure to be saluted by the smell of fried slices of bacon and eggs.

Growing With Rochester Bigger and Better

Pretty Hopeful.
"I like the way English faces things. He's so wonderfully hopeful."
"Hopeful? I should say he was. What do you suppose he's doing now?"
"Dunno."
"Why, he's setting up a program for the celebration of the anniversary of the first hundred years of universal peace."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Ungallant.
Katherine—As long as you say you understand the language of the fow-ers, what does this bunch of American Beauty roses say? Kidder—That a fool and his money are soon parted. Brooklyn Citizen.

Simplicity
When the missionary in Africa visits his missions, he is always accompanied by a negro who attends to his personal needs. The conversation between the priest and his companion is often interesting on account of its great simplicity. Here is an example:
"Father, when you were traveling in your country to teach catechism, who was carrying your satchel—a negro?"
"No, my son, in the land of the white men there are no negroes."

"Oh! It was not a negro who carried your rice?"
"No; I am telling you that in my country there are no negroes."
"Father, what is the name of your village?"
"Its name is W—"
"How many huts are there in your village?"
"There are quite a few, but I don't know the number; I never counted them."
"Father, have you brothers and sisters?"
"Yes, one brother and three sisters."

"What is the name of your brother?"
"His name is Julius."
"You must tell him to come here."
"Very well. When I write, I will tell him to come to see you."
"Father, are all your sisters from the same mother?"
"Of course, good Christians are not like pagans. When they unite themselves to a woman by matrimony, they remain with their wife, always the same and only one!"
