ABOUT COLLARS.

Practical Hints Concerning the Most Fashionable of Accessories. Quaint collar and cuff sets are made from embroidered handkerchiefs. One side, with a corner forming each end, is cut off two and a half inches deep for the collar, and each of the other points makes a cuff four inches deep. Then take val lace about an inch wide and ease it instead of pulling it around the hems. Too much fullness makes the lace turn back on the cuff and roll up in anything but a pretty fashion.

White embroidered handkerchiefs make dainty sets, the kind that may be worn with any color or with white just as well, but those with bits of color introduced into the work have a style about them that is very attractive. There are those with tiny flowers done in an effective blue. All the rest of the embroidery is done in white. The same idea is carried out in red or violet. The sets are not only easy to make, but are easy to do up, and if you have the lace while it is still wet it will come forth with just a little body to it, like new.

Buy a man's hemstitched linen handkerchief and trace in the center of it two Dutch collars. Mark the edges in scallops, using a silver dollar for the purpose. In the center of each scallop mark a dot. Buttonhole the scallops, and work the dots solid with mercerized embroidery cotton. With the hemstitched edges make a pair of cuffs.

A fine linen handkerchief with hemstitched edge and drawn work decoration will make a handsome sailor collar pointed at the back. Fold it three corner wise and make a scissors slash from one corner to one inch beyond the exact center. Then place the handkerchief around the neck and trim away a very little of the linen at the back and sides. Slope it gradually down to the front points, bind the cut edge with a narrow straight strip of linen, and with a pressing the collar is finished. Cuffs to match may be added by cutting a duplicate handkerchief diagonally in half and binding the raw edges.

Pretty collars are made with old-fashioned dot-and-cross corners. Each corner is sharply pointed, they are stitched together and made into large stars or perfectly straight. Cretonne collars are edged with satin and made in Dutch shape, long pointed.

Take a large square of black not slit it through on one side to the center and cut it out to fit the neck. Hemstitch the edges and tack a black silk tassel at each corner or use a small jet pendant.
