KETCHUP TIME.

Excellent Ways to Season Your Winter Meals.

A GOOD MUSHROOM RECIPE.

Tested Ways of Preserving the Succulent Tomato, to Say Nothing of Three Other Savory Relishes For Meat Dishes and Boston Baked Beans.

Ketchup time is here, and it behooves the good housewife to put up some of this appetizer. For tomato ketchup take half a peck of sound ripe tomatoes and cook them well; quarter them, put a few slices at a time with a half pound of salt. Let stand for twenty four hours; drain the juice through a hair sieve into a pan. Add two dozen small onions and ten shallots or if not liked two ounces of white pepper and four tablespoonfuls of onion juice. Simmer for half an hour and rub through a fine hair sieve which has been dipped through a blue hair sieve.

Cook for thirty minutes more. Bottle, cork and seal.

Take half a large shredder of green walnut shells and put them in a wooden tub with a half pound of coarse salt. Beat and mash them from time to time for six days. Be up and drain the juice into a saucepan and continue to mash the shells with a little extra salt. Strain the liquid into a preserving pan; to every quart add an ounce each of bruised ginger, two ounces of pickling spice, a half ounce of whole cloves, a few pieces of horseradish and a good handful of shallots. Boil for about one hour. Meanwhile put a few walnuts in a bottle, then fill with the liquid, cork and seal.

To make tomato and mushroom sauce put a half pound of mushrooms with a half pound of tomatoes, add three ounces of butter, a little flour, salt and pepper. Put the mushrooms and tomatoes in a pan and add for each quart one pint of whole pepper. Place a weighted plate on the top and stand in a pan of boiling water. Bring to a boil and boil for quite two hours. Strain off the juice and simmer it for thirty minutes. Let it stand, and next day add a tablespoonful of brandy to each pint and again let it stand in a cool place for twenty four hours. Strain into small bottles and be careful not to disturb the dregs. Then cork and seal.

Good Idea

What do you do with your shoulders when you start, I was heard to say. You should [illegible] there, for it is a necessity here the wet hair dangles [illegible] ing jacket is worn [illegible] during the process. Quite a few women do not possess such a thing. A splendid substitute is made by taking two towels. Fasten on [illegible] ting the corners of two ends together. In case the opening through which the head is to pass is not large enough the towels should be joined directly over the shoulders.

Homemade Buttermilk.

Beat sour milk very rapidly for about two minutes, and a superior kind of buttermilk is produced. This is well worth knowing, as much of the buttermilk produced in creameries is unfit to drink and that made from tablets requires a certain temperature which is not always easy to command.

Product of Sand Lots.

Henry Ellsworth Zimmerman, who went to New York as an extra fielder in Jack Doyle and two other players, is a product of the sand lots of Brooklyn, New York city, and is thirty years old. He attracted attention as a semi-professional [illegible] and 1903. Zimmerman's first real professional engagement was with the Wilkesbarre club of the State league. He remained in the minors only two seasons. Chicago purchased his release in the fall of 1907 for $1,250. As a schoolboy he used to pitch and as a semi-professional second baseman. Zimmerman was the champion batter in 1912 with an average of .372.

An Ambidextrous Pitcher.

Tony Mullane, who was one of the best pitchers of his day, in the eighties could pitch with either arm, writes Sam Crane in the New York Evening Journal and frequently when his team was so far ahead that there was no danger of losing he would switch from his natural right handed delivery to his left, but he was unable to get the speed and effectiveness with his left that he could with his right. In fact, he was easy to hit when pitching the southpaw way. Mullane is now a policeman in Chicago.

Started as Third Baseman.

Jack Doyle, who went to the Chicago Cubs in trade, is a native of Caseyville, Ill., and is thirty years old. He first attracted the attention of the big league scouts in 1907 as third baseman of the Springfield (O.) club.

The same year Matthewson made his bid and finally traded Doyle, but not until the New York club had paid $1,500 for the [illegible]. Doyle led the National league in batting last year with an average of .320.

Brushing and Massage Aid Hair and Scalp

By DR WOODS HUTCHINSON.

For the greatest conservation of the skin, the most perfect nourishment [illegible] is the hairless [illegible] in the body, one part of [illegible] to three of [illegible] grease. This is a saving [illegible] works partly by lifting and [illegible] the hour from the scalp so as to [illegible] free [illegible] of air partly by stimulating the [illegible] flow of the [illegible] pushing the roots of the hair.

Use no brush stiffer or harder than you are comfortable with on the back of your hand for fear of [illegible] ing," which should [illegible] your brushing although of course the simple [illegible] smoothing and disentangling [illegible] for a brief "glow" stiffer [illegible] need [illegible] used. As a general [illegible] were brushes do more harm than good to the scalp.

Thorough, [illegible] massage of the scalp for ten or fifteen minutes both night and morning with the best of rollers or vibrators ever yet invented the tips of the fingers [illegible] great value in [illegible] the scalp, and through it the [illegible] in healthy condition.

The one [illegible] which threaten progressive and [illegible] loss of hair is thinning of the scalp and tightening of it down to the skull with the [illegible] tion of the [illegible] and [illegible] neath it. And the best [illegible] much of either preventing or checking the wasting away and shrinking [illegible] change is [illegible] massage of the scalp, pushing it forward and [illegible] side to side over the smooth skull surface beneath.

For Aching Feet

Tired and aching feet can be relieved by a borax bath. Add two or three tablespoonfuls of borax to a basin of warm water and soak the feet for ten or fifteen minutes each night before retiring. Try this for a week or so, and you will be surprised at the results.

The uses of borax in the household are legion, and once in the home borax becomes a hygienic necessity. What cannot be accomplished in a cleansing way with the aid of borax is hardly worth trying.

A Way Around a Difficulty

By ELINOR MARSH

Mrs. Haskins had but one person in the world to live to, that was Alice Nell. The old lady had the usual selfishness of one of her age and condition and would not on any account consent that Alice should marry.

"But, grandma," argued the girl, "suppose I marry and you continued to live with me?"

"That wouldn't do at all. No house is large enough for two families. No, Alice, you can't marry as long as I live. I took you when you were a little girl, and but for me you would have had no home. Now that I have no home but with you it is your duty to remain single and take care of me."

That ended the dialogue. Alice sighed, for she had a lover who was arguing on the other side of the question. He admitted that Alice should continue to make [illegible] grandmother but he [illegible] to take upon himself a case of mother in law, or, rather, of grandmother in law, which was worse and argued that the old woman should be satisfied with this. But so long as she would consent to nothing but Alice's spinsterhood there was nothing for it except that Alice should remain a spinster.

Fred Martin, Alice's lover, finally persuaded her to a marriage which should be concealed from her grandmother. The old lady was so feeble that the couple did not expect her to live very long, and while she did live this plan would relieve Alice to take care of her on [illegible] grandmother's own conditions. [illegible] would be said on Fred and Alice, and after all wouldn't it be [illegible] to grow old sooner than a case of [illegible] law for so far as the [illegible] concerned Fred would be [illegible].

So the [illegible] and Fred fitted [illegible] where his wife lived [illegible] single [illegible] which Alice could visit [illegible] went to bed at [illegible] and [illegible] she was asleep Alice would slip out and go to the home where she really belonged. They kept a maid so that Mrs. Haskins woke up and Alice wasn't on hand the maid [illegible] she had stepped around [illegible] something.

This was not exactly home life but as Fred was at work all day, not returning usually till after 7 o'clock, it was not so bad and it was not obligatory on his wife to be there. By and by Alice told her grandmother that she [illegible] for a few weeks and the old lady consented [illegible] the maid.

After Alice was [illegible] from the hospital there [illegible] and when she was continually [illegible] for something. But Alice could not go often enough for [illegible] morning when she was away and the maid was engaged [illegible] sweep a chat at the [illegible] on the step would [illegible].

Mrs. Haskins [illegible] up in her [illegible] the same home. The [illegible] grandmother [illegible] landlady [illegible] a very mother [illegible] old lady would [illegible] should be sent [illegible] to death [illegible] Fred [illegible] Alice [illegible] wanted [illegible] Alice [illegible] and [illegible] the other.

There [illegible] brought a [illegible] to be the [illegible] that he regretted [illegible] asking that [illegible] This [illegible] the old lady [illegible] Alice wrote a letter [illegible] and mother [illegible] to leave the child [illegible] was being [illegible] and see it when [illegible].

This brought a man [illegible] who gave his name as [illegible] Mantz and after a conference [illegible] it was decided that unless [illegible] would take the girl away Mrs. Haskins [illegible] and the family was increased [illegible].

After awhile [illegible] began to pour a tale [illegible] Mrs. Haskins' ear. His wife had deserted him and her child for her [illegible]. The old lady was [illegible] at the cold [illegible] the grandmother that she could [illegible] contain herself.

Mrs. Haskins [illegible] nothing up in her [illegible] the same home. The [illegible] grandmother [illegible] landlady [illegible] a very mother [illegible] old lady would [illegible] should be sent [illegible] to death [illegible] Fred [illegible] Alice [illegible] wanted [illegible] Alice [illegible] and [illegible] the other.

After awhile [illegible] began to pour a tale [illegible] Mrs. Haskins' ear. His wife had deserted him and her child for her [illegible]. The old lady was [illegible] at the cold [illegible] the grandmother that she could [illegible] contain herself.

Meanwhile the old lady noticed that Fred and Alice were together a good deal and she wished Fred's wife would die so that he could marry Alice and the latter could [illegible] a mother as well as a father. When the news was [illegible] Fred came home one evening and announced that his wife was "no more."

He tried to [illegible] appear respectful to his wife's memory [illegible] for [illegible] difficult. [illegible] so [illegible] side she [illegible] the departed [illegible] created both her husband and [illegible] body. Mrs. Haskins averred that [illegible] what ever was [illegible] that she had been a soulless, shameless creature and the sooner Martin forgot her the better. As for Alice she maintained a discreet silence, which her grandmother attributed to an expectation that she would take the lost wife's place.

The old lady after this was very impatient to learn that the widower had proposed to Alice. She was not long kept waiting for the announcement or the wedding. After the ceremony she fell on her grandson-in-law's shoulder and hoped heaven would punish that "old cat" who had caused him so much trouble.
