

The Ways She Had

I was a big boy when she came to our house. I was twelve years old. My brother Ben was ten and Sis was eight. I didn't believe she would come until the last minute, though Dad had called us together the night before and told us on the morrow he would be married.

She had the queerst, nicest ways. I could hardly understand her ways were so different from other people's ways. Years passed, and we learned that Lisbeth was not only our cook but our adviser, our manager and our comforter.

I see the same ways in Mary when she is caring for little Lisbeth. There are only a mother's ways. —Kathleen Sullivan the Canadian Messenger.
