GIRLS HELP FRANCE

Red Cross Worker Tells Thrilling Tale of Experience.

THE NEW RESURRECTION

Chicago.—Miss Gladys M. Spencer of Highland Park, Ill., told 150 girls, ranging from seventeen years of age, her experiences as a Red Cross worker in France, and girls everywhere will be thrilled over her talk.

It is difficult to realize that a tenderly reared American girl handled herself with so much poise in a shell-shattered area. The group of girls she was addressing were preparing themselves to face the same dangers, and thousands of other American girls and women as nurses are more than doing their bits.

GIRLS TO PICK FRUIT

Sudden Attack by Airplane

"At 1,000 feet I ordered the watch stopped. No more balloons had been attacked, and although ours was now the only one up I could see British fighting planes ascending from the aerodrome behind us to chase away the enemy. So I decided to venture up again. We ascended to 3,000 feet this time, and soon were at work again."

Miss Alexon Robinson, a member of the Denver Flying Squadron, went out last summer with other college girls in Colorado, and helped pick cherries for a 1,000-ton cherry orchard. Eleven girls went out camped for ten days and picked 6,000 pounds of cherries.

HEROINES IN BURCAU

There is enough of the right kind of work to do. The right kind of woman has many avenues open to her. Some of the most interesting and adventurous are the making of history, the glories of the uniform and a chance of honor and glory. But the most important of which is the right to do a job that is not only a job but a life.
