

HELMETS REVEAL GREAT DREAM OF EX-KAISER

Gorgeous Headgear Reflects Plans for Triumphal Entry Into Paris on "Der Tag."

SEIZED BY AMERICAN BOYS IN COBLENZ WAREHOUSE

Supply of 85,000 to Be Used in New York's Victory Way.

Twelve hundred polished nickel, gunmetal and patent leather helmets, with gorgeous trappings that eclipse the splendor of the headgear of the proudest of Roman centuries, have been pyramided in Victory Way, New York city, into a monument to the millions of Americans who shattered a mad monarch's dream of the greatest triumphal entry ever conceived in military history.

These helmets are part of a supply of 85,000 seized by the American Army of Occupation in Coblenz in December, 1918. A large warehouse, guarded by a German officer, housed the precious headgear that was to adorn the heads of the German Uhlans and infantrymen when the armed legions of the Kaiser catered down the Champs Elysees. The scene of the Parisian war to be tempered by amazement when "Der Tag" arrived. The world was to stand aghast before the impressive spectacle.

Of all the gorgeous features of New York city's Victory Way, on the Park avenue plaza between Forty-fifth and Fifty-fifth streets the pyramids of helmets, with their more than ordinary significance, constitute one of the most interesting.

Back in 1918 Kaiser Wilhelm and his generals, intoxicated with repeated successes of arms, placed an order with a large German firm for the manufacture of the helmets. No grimy, unkempt German army would parade the streets of Paris. Eighty-five thousand picked soldiers, attired with scrupulous care, gleaming and glittering with military contraptions, would prove the folly of the French in opposing the will of the German war god.

The Coblenz warehouse was selected to protect the helmets until the eventual day arrived. But months ran into years. Still the headpieces were kept oiled and shiny, each wrapped carefully in paper. Thus they were found when the Americans took over Coblenz.

It has been said France fought the war for her existence, England for sport and America for souvenirs. And the Yankee penchant for souvenirs soon asserted itself. Some thousands of the helmets were distributed to the doughboys before an order came from general headquarters that the helmets were to be saved for transportation to the United States. They have been distributed for exhibition in the Victory Liberty Loan drive.

New York city's Victory Way is studded with innovations that astound the visitor. The two pyramids of helmets will be on display throughout the Victory Liberty Loan Campaign.

HOW MANY BONDS DID THE SMITHS BUY?

A Victory Bond Puzzle by Sam Lloyd. "Well, here we are with another Liberty Loan," remarked Mrs. Smith to Mr. Smith, "and we must not forget that while the war is in its last throes there are still a million of our boys on the other side, and Uncle Sam has simply got to have the wherewithal to take the best care of them until we get them back." "Right you are," seconded Mr. Smith, "and I'm the sort of a patriot who doesn't quit until the job is thoroughly done."

That sounds as though the Smiths are having another bond-buying contest, so let me tell you what they did in the Fourth Loan.

Mr. Smith got in first with a tidy investment, but after that every time he added a $50 bond to his pile Mrs. Smith subscribed for a $100 one, and so it went right up to the time Mr. McAdoo rang the bell. Mrs. Smith doubling Mr. Smith's every purchase.

By how much did Mr. Smith beat Mrs. Smith? Well, you see, Mr. Smith's total was $3,000, and before buying his last $300 worth he had purchased three times as much as Mrs. Smith had bought when Mr. Smith's total stood at the amount corresponding to Mrs. Smith's final total.

Now, then, who can figure out the amount of the Smiths' total investment?

MAN'S EVER-FAITHFUL FRIEND

Evangeline Booth Eulogizes the Service Which the Horse Has at All Times Rendered.

Evangeline Booth, the gifted commander of the Salvation army, in Rider and Driver, pays a beautiful tribute to the horse. The horseless age which was predicted when the motor came, she says, has not arrived, and never will. She continues: "From the very beginning of all things, through the march of the centuries in every sphere of life, the horse has occupied a significant place. In sport, in art, in literature, in war, in peace, in commerce, in romance, in tragedy, in drudgery, in love, in religion, in life and in death, this reliable, courageous, ever-ready-for-command servant of man has proved himself a most potent factor. His fleet hoofs have flashed light on the pebbled path of every poet; his arched neck and tossing mane have taxed the skill of the ablest sculptor's chisel; his attractive figure has made realistic the story of every class of literature—historic, fiction, fact and biblical; the delight of childhood, the willing slave of man, the sure trust of old age, this faithful ally through all time has plowed the fields and hauled the loads and penetrated the wilderness and waded the rivers and with boot-stained flanks has carried the warriors in battle, and tossing snowy mane has borne the victor home through triumphal arch and a thousand times ten thousand when worn by toils and lack of food to a mere skeleton, has pressed on with his task with a patience, perseverance and a sweetness of temper that one could almost call divine."

There is a certain very companionable little squirrel which belongs to an officer on a warship, somewhere in South African waters. She is a great talker—in her way—but she is always very careful not to talk when any one else is talking. Her master will call her down from her bedroom, and she appears with cheery little squeaks and giggles. Then she waits.

"Will you have toast this morning or milk?" is the question with which he greets her, and her answer is a decided chatter for a moment. When she stops, he goes on with the conversation, and she listens to him, with her little eyes full of interest, for what he is telling her. Then comes her turn, and she talks a bit. She is a very playful little squirrel, and she has never been known to lose her temper with her master, though sometimes in a romp, when she gets rather frisky, she bites a bit too hard. And, if her master gently raps her, she pretends to feel grieved about it, goes into a corner and sniffs and all that he can do is to leave her alone until she wants to play again.—Montreal Herald.

Steady, Not Erratic. It is a good thing to have work done well and quickly by one person in an organization. But it is a far better thing to have that whole organization work together effectively, each one doing a part carefully and conscientiously, than to have an expert here and there setting the pace.

It is safe to say that any business that succeeds does so because the head of that business never forgets that he is working with human beings and not with machines. He does not expect them to do the impossible any more than he expects impossibilities of himself, but he does require of himself a certain amount of concentrated effort done at the right time every day, and he does require from all his office force the same effort and concentration.

The best way to conserve energy is not by speeding up every once in so often, but by keeping engines fired at all time, ready to do the work at the right time and in the right place.—New York Evening Telegram.

Two Queer Strikes. A one-man strike occurred in an Australian city. A prisoner in the town jail, a tailor by trade, refused to work in the tailor's shop on the plea that it would be contrary to his principles as a trade unionist, "unfair competition with his brother unionists outside," as he put it. He sent a letter to the tailor's union, but as they took no notice he was condemned to "three days' solitary confinement, during which he continued the strike."

There was a strike of paupers once in a country poorhouse. They struck for new potatoes! They expected greens for dinner and, as there were none, they refused to eat old spuds! They even declined to enter the dining room. The guardians prescribed a bread and water diet, with the result that at the end of 24 hours the inmates were ready for potatoes—any old.

Macaroni Reigns Even in China. The succulent Italian paste spreads far and wide. We learn from the United States commerce reports: "The manufacture of vermicelli and macaroni in China is an enormous industry and is carried on almost entirely by hand. Wheat, beans and rice are the principal flour used. At Chefoo the industry assumes greater proportions than anywhere else in China, and there the vermicelli is principally a green bean product. Vermicelli is eaten throughout all sections of the country. China exports annually about 15,000 tons of vermicelli of all sorts."
